PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION

The first edition of the Abhinayadarpaṇam published twentythree years ago was welcomed by all interested persons including the late A. K. Coomaraswamy whose translation of the work named The Mirror of Gesture (Cambridge, Mass. 1917) directed my attention to this Sanskrit text. Still for various reasons I could not think of publishing its second edition even after it was out of print for a long time, and there was some demand for it. One such reason and an important one too, was that I then engaged myself in studying the Nāṭyaśāstra and was planning a translation of this important work, and thought that this would be of greater use to readers interested in the subject. Coomaraswamy also published in the meantime a revised edition of The Mirror of Gesture (New York, 1936) and utilised my work for the revision. This also relieved me for the time being from the urgency of undertaking a second edition. But, for the last three or four years, even after publication of the first volume of the translation of the Nāṭyaśāstra, Calcutta, 1951, I have been receiving earnest enquiries from various quarters whether a copy of the Abhinayadarpaṇam may still be available. Some of the enquirers gave me to understand that they had read the translation of the Nāṭyaśāstra but still required a copy of the Abhinayadarpaṇam. Hence, I could no longer remain indifferent in this regard, and have come gradually to believe that a new edition of this work may remove a real want of a class of readers. It seemed that its very brevity while it dealt with all essential gestures and postures used in Hindu dance and drama, had made it something like a favourite of the student of these arts. My hesitation about publishing a second edition was thus finally overcome. On taking up the preparation of a copy for the press I found that some of the views expressed in the introduction and notes have undergone some change during the last twentythree years, and my idea about the need of readers of the book is also no longer quite the same. So I have slightly modified the introduction and notes by making necessary emendation and omission here and there. It may be hoped that these changes have added to its usefulness. If some readers may still require additional information on certain topics they are requested to refer very kindly to the translation of the Nāṭyaśāstra which, treats of all relevant matters in much greater detail.

INTRODUCTION

1. THE PRESENT EDITION. Though the Nāṭaka a typical form Hindu drama, forms, a large section of Sanskrit literature, our knowledge about the way in which the art of producing a play developed in India, is still very inadequate.¹ This is due mostly to a lack of sufficient materials. The only work which gives us a clear and comprehensive idea of the Hindu stage is the Nāṭyaśāstra. Yet for the study of history of the development of ancient Indian theatrical art, this work, though very important in many respects, is not quite sufficient by itself. We need therefore make no apology in offering for the first time a critical edition of Nandikeśvara's Abhinaya-darpana which exclusively treats of gestures in a manner rather different from the NŚ., which also has these among other things as its subjects of treatment. The Mirror of Gesture published with an illuminating introduction by A. K. Coomaraswamy, claims to be a translation of this work. But on comparing it with our text, it has been found out that the text used in preparing the MG is not exactly identical with the AD, though the former has absorbed a major part of the latter work and supplemented the same by making occasional quotations from other works of the same class (see § 2). And an important feature of our text is its treatment of items like postures and movements etc. dependent on feet, such as Maṇḍala, Sthānaka, Cārī and Gati, which although omitted by the original of the MG, is indispensably necessary for the complete understanding of Hindu histrionic art.

The MG, though it does not fully represent the AD, has been a very useful contribution to our knowledge regarding the production of ¹ This was written in 1934. Conditions have changed since the publication of the translation of the NŚ, in 1951 by the Asiatic Society.

² For the meaning of this term and the following ones, see 'Select Glossary' at the end.

Hindu plays. The present edited text of the AD will, it may be hoped, supplement such a knowledge; for in it some fresh materials have been brought to light for the first time.

2. THE TRANSLATION. The translation has not been made very literal. Students of Sanskrit will however experience little difficulty about the language of the AD. A few words which have been used in it with special import and may for this reason offer difficulty to readers, have been explained in the Select Glossary.

3. CRITICAL APPARATUS. The present text has been reconstructed from five manuscripts, of which two are complete and the rest fragmentary. The two complete MSS, do not fully agree with each other regarding the order in which various topics have been treated. In this respect the fragmentary MSS, also vary with the complete ones as well as among themselves. The following description of the MSS, will among other things notice this mutual variation.

M. A Devanāgarī transcript of the only complete MS, (in the Telugu script) of the work (No. 304 of the collection made in 1894) in the possession of the Madras Government Oriental MSS, Library (vide p. xxix of the Report of a Search of the Sanskrit and Tamil MSS for the year 1893-1894 by Sheshagiri Shastri).

V. A palm-leaf MS (fairly complete) in the Telugu script, in the possession of the Viśvabhāratī, Santiniketan. It bears the number 3038. Its size is 16.2" x 1" and it has 29 leaves. This MS puts the bāndhava-hasta-lakṣaṇam last of all and omits the navagraha-hasta-lakṣaṇam, navarasāḥ and avasthābhedāḥ (daśāvasthāḥ). And moreover its treatment of the nyttabastāḥ and pada-bhedāḥ is incomplete.

A.¹ A palm leaf MS (not complete) in the Telugu script with a Telugu ṭikā from the Adyar Library. It has 53 leaves. It bears the number XXII. C. 25. Its size is 5.8" x 1.4".

A.² Another palm-leaf MS (not complete) in the Telugu script from the Adyar Library. It bears the number XXII. C. 38. Its size is 8.5" x 1.2".

A.³ A incomplete paper MS in Telugu script from the Adyar Library. It bears the number VIII. J. 9. Its size is 9.3" x 6.8" and has 14 pages.

Besides these five MSS of the AD the following printed work and MSS have been utilized for the reconstruction of the text:

MG. The Mirror of Gesture (Cambridge, Mass., 1917) edited by A. K. Coomaraswamy and Duggirala Gopalakrishnayya. This work is a translation of the Skt. text briefly described before (see § 1). It is based on the second edition (in Telugu character) of the original published under the editorship of Tiruvenkatacari of Nadamangalam (MG. p. 10). With reference to the passages it has in common with the AD, the original of MG in places seems to suffer from textual corruptions. But in spite of such defects this work renders valuable aid in determining the position of the Navagrabahastas which appear only in M (see § 4). It arranges the subject of its treatment in the following order: (Items not occurring in the reconstructed text of the AD have been marked with asterisks.)

I. From the India Office Library we received two MSS. (nos, 3028 and 3090) named AD. One of them is in the Telugu script and the other is a Devanāgarī transcript of the same. On examination it appeared to be a work dealing with abhinaya and tāla belonging probably to the school of Āñjaneya cited as an authority on saṃgīta in various works; for, the end of the abhinaya portion of this work, reads as iti a(ā)ñjaneya-matam. But this abhinaya portion is frangmentary and seems to be a compilation from different sources. Slokas 90-95, 96, 97b-98a, 101-102, 104-105 of the AD occur in it with a few variations worthy of notice.

P. This is the MS no. 42 of the Appendix Collection A (1916-18) of the Government MSS Library with the Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute, Poona. It has been entered in the Catalogue of the Institute published in 1925 as the Bharatārṇava. This fact led to an examination of this MS, for the AD, according to a passage in the MG, was an abridgment of the Bharatārṇava. The examination of the MS however revealed the fact that the work though it possibly had some connexion with the BhA, was not itself the same. (For details see § 5) In spite of this, the MS which has certain passages in common with AD, was of help in reconstructing our text.

B. This is the MS no. 40 of the Appendix Collection A. (1916-1918) of the Govt. MSS Library placed with the B.O.R. Institute, Poona. It has been named in the Catalogue of MSS published by the Institute as the Bharata-śāstra-grantha. This work appears to be a curious compilation of passages from various works including the NS.

Besides quotations from different works which this MS names, it contains passages from unmentioned sources which include Daṇḍin and Nandikeśvara. The portions taken from the latter author's AD consist of viniyogas of the Asamyuta-bastās. These offer some variants. The author of this Bharata-śāstragrantha appears to have been a commentator of the Prasanna-rāghava; for he refers to himself as follows: udāttādi-svarūpan-tu asmatkṛta-prasanna-rāghava-tīkāyām.

4. RECONSTRUCTION. The present edition of the text of the AD has been based principally on V, but the navagraha-bastā-lakṣaṇa which occurs only in M, has been accepted as belonging to the work. Support in this matter has been available from the MG which does not ascribe it to granthāntara though all its borrowings from works other than the AD have been prefixed with such ascriptions. The fact that the planet-worship in India was not later than the early centuries of the Christian era³ when the gods of the Puranic pantheon were already established, may also give us additional justification to consider the nava-graha-bastā-lakṣaṇa as belonging to the original AD. For we do not know why planetary deities should be considered later than other deities who in their Puranic character were not probably very old. And as some of the planets have been mentioned in the Atharva-veda, planetary deities may in fact be as old as some of the deities of the Vedic pantheon.⁴ Passages on rasa and avasthā which occur only in M, and have no support from MG, have not been included in the edited text. They have been separately shown at the end.

ABHINAYA: ITS MEANING.

5. DRAMA AND THE HINDU PLAY. To understand properly the meaning of the word abhinaya (roughly speaking, the word for 'histrionic art' in Sanskrit) it is necessary to have a clear notion about the nature and spirit of Hindu plays which are often called 'dramas.' A Hindu play which is called a dṛśya or prekṣya kāvya or nāṭya or rūpaka in Sanskrit, though it has some superficial resemblance to drama, is not identical with the same thing; rather there is a considerable difference between the two. The names such as rūpa and dṛśya kāvya which include all kinds of Hindu plays, give us clue to the difference. A play is called rūpa or rūpaka, i. e., 'having-a-form' on account of its visibility (dṛśyatā).¹ And the term rūpaka is applied to a play on the analogy of a figure of a speech of the same (i. e., rūpaka or metaphor), because in a play we assume a non-distinction between characters (dramatis personae) and the actors representing them.² And dṛśya (prekṣya) kāvya means a poem which is to be seen i. e., a poetical composition capable of being enjoyed not by its reading, but from its stage representation. In earlier times it was called prekṣā. The idea of action seems to be missing altogether in these names. And the very nature of a Hindu play discloses its relative neglect of action.³

The word nāṭya, which is also a synonym for a rūpa or dṛśya kāvya and points to its lyrical nature, throws further light on the point. In accordance with the etymological meaning of this word which is derived from the root naṭ (= ṇṭ) meaning 'to dance,' Hindu plays are compositions in which rhythm and lyrical elements preponderate, and action is given a very minor scope.⁴

All these go to show that realism in the ordinary sense has no place in Hindu plays. And after a closer examination of them, one is sure to discover their suggestive character and the consequent demand on the imagination of the spectators.⁵ Those who are accustomed to realism in art may call that demand inordinate, but Hindu theorists on the subject believe that the highest aesthetic enjoyment is not possible without giving the greatest possible scope to imagination, and are therefore in favour of avoiding realism. For, no amount of making things appear as real to spectators, can be successful unless the latter call imagination to their aid. In this connexion we may quote Sylvain Lévi's apt remark in translation.⁶ "Indian genius produced a new art which the word rasa summarizes and symbolizes, and which condenses it in one brief formula: 'the poet does not express but he suggests'".

Having regard to these characteristics of Hindu plays, they may perhaps suitably be called 'lyrico-dramatic spectacles,' but not 'dramas' from which their aim and object as well as the attitude of their actors and spectators greatly differ.

6. THE OBJECT OF HINDU PLAYS. To evoke rasa in the spectator is the aim and object of the Hindu play-wright. The term rasa has been translated as 'flavour,' 'Sentiment' or 'poetic sentiment'. These translations, however, are of not much help to anyone, unless an explanation is offered. And the nature and characteristic of rasa will be quite clear when the relative position of spectators and actors, is considered. "We see on the stage, for instance, Rāma, and Sītā who excites his affection, aided by suitable circumstances of time and place; this affection is intimated by speech and gesture alike, which indicate both dominant emotion of love and its transient shapes in the various stages of love required. The spectacle evokes in the mind of the spectator impressions of the emotion of love which experience has planted there, and this ideal and generic excitation of the emotion produces in him that sense of joy which is known as Sentiment (rasa). The fullness of the enjoyment depends essentially on the nature and experience of the spectator, to whom it falls to identify himself with the hero or any other character, and thus to experience in ideal form his emotions and feelings. He may even succeed in his effort to the extent that he weeps real tears, but the Sentiment is still one of exquisite joy. We may compare the thrill of pleasure which the most terrifying narration excites in us, and we are all conscious of the sweetness of sad tales."⁷

5 S. Rice, op. cit., p. 102.

6 Le théâtre indien, p. 417.

7. THE TECHNIQUE OF PLAYS. Before considering the literary technique as well as the technique of representation (abhinaya), the two means by which plays evoke rasa, attention should be paid to their main guiding principles. It is the doctrine of suggestion that lies at the basis of Hindu plays and indeed of all other arts of India. Hence it is found that a Hindu playwright's method of depicting a character, is different from that of his fellow-artist in the West. Instead of giving prominence to his varied activities, the Hindu playwright would build up the character by mentioning characteristic emotional complexes suggestive of it as a whole.⁸

That verses of varied forms are abundantly used in Hindu plays, is simply for the purpose of calling forth emotion by means of the lyrical element present in their musical recitation.

8. ABHINAYA. The Sanskrit word abhinaya is made up of the prefix abhi 'towards' and the root nī 'to carry'. Thus it means 'representing (carrying) a play to (towards) spectators'.⁹ According to the Sāhitya-darpaṇa that representation is called the imitation (or visualisation) of the conditions (physical and mental) of the characters in a drama.¹⁰ But the aesthetic significance of the imitation will not be clear unless the object of plays, viz., the evoking of rasa in the spectators, is taken into consideration. Hence we see Mallinātha, the famous commentator, defining abhinaya as movements for suggesting rasa (Sentiment) and bhāva (State)¹¹. For this reason, the word abhinaya may be said to be the means for disclosing to spectators the beauty or manifold pleasurable aspects of the play which cannot be adequately appreciated by simply reading its text. In consideration of all these facts, abhinaya may be termed the 'suggestive imitation' of the various moods and emotional states of characters in a play. Therefore, in spite of an apparent similarity between abhinaya and acting, the latter term, whenever it is used in connection with Hindu plays, does not mean quite the same thing. From the word nāṭa (the Sanskrit word for 'actor' primarily meaning 'a dancer') and such words as nāṭayati (derived from the same root naṭ meaning 'to dance') it appears that the ancient Hindus had their plays 'danced' and not 'acted'. This is corroborated by the evidence of the Harivaṃśa (Viṣṇuparva, ch. 93, śl. 28.) which uses an expression like nāṭakaṃ nanṛtuḥ (danced a play). Rājaśekhara (c. 10th century A.C.) too, in his prologue to the Karpūra-mañjarī has an expression like 'saṭṭaam naccidavvam' (a Saṭṭaka is to be danced). Hence in course of the abhinaya of a play which is but a poem to be seen (drśya-kāvya), rhythm in all its possible aspects plays an important part. And its rhythmical character conveyed through abhinaya and dance, made it suitable for the suggestion of the deepest and the most tender emotions which tend to evoke rasa (Sentiment) in spectators.

8 S. Rice, op. cit., p. 102.

9 NS. VIII. 6;

Depicting narratives by means of dance and abhinaya, is still to be found in the Śaiva ritualistic dances of the Nilapūjā found in Bengal.¹² The peoples of Indonesia (Java and Bali) which can trace the history of their connection with India to a very remote past, still depict stories from the Mahābhārata and Purāṇas by means of dance.

¹¹ abhinayo rasabbāvādi-vyāñjaka-ceṣṭā-ōiṣeṣaḥ on Kirāta, X. 42.

¹² A popular festival in honour of Śiva (Nilakaṇṭha) in the closing week of the Bengali year,

Rabindranath Tagore during his visit to this country noticed such dances. Of this he writes that "in their plays and musical performances, from beginning to end,—their movements, battle-scenes, love-scenes, even their clowning,—everything is danced. One who knows their peculiar dance-language,¹³ can follow the story with the help of words. The other day we witnessed a dance in the Rajah's palace which, we are told, represented the story of Śālva and Satya-vatī, making it clear that not only emotion but also narration, is transmuted into dance by them.¹⁴ In that connection Tagore very clearly explains how rhythm and gestures, the two elements of dance may convey the beauty of a narrative to spectators, "The events of human life," he says, "in their outward aspect, are all displayed as movement. So, when any event of outstanding importance has to be portrayed, it is but natural that its movement should be given a corresponding dignity by the addition of rhythmic grace. The dance here is just such giving of rhythmic prominence to the events of a story, keeping in the background, or leaving altogether, the words. The Purāṇic legends, which in poetry, have to make their appeal only through the ear, are here addressed to the eye. Of the words that are the vehicle of poetry, the rhythm is governed by the natural laws of music, but the meaning is artificial, depending on sound-symbols mutually adopted by men. Both are necessary for the poem. In the dance of these people, likewise the rhythm alone is not sufficient for this kind of dance. Their tongue is silent, but the whole body does the talking by signs as well as by movements. Nothing could be more foreign to any actual field of battle than this form they give to their dance-warfare. But if some fairy land had been governed by the rule that fighting must be done rhythmically, a false step entailing defeat, then this is the kind of battle that would have been waged there. If anyone is inclined to smile at such lack of realism, he 13 Āṅika abhinaya or gesture is an essential part of this dance-language.

14 Letters from Java. The Visvabharati Quarterly, Vol. 6 No. 1, 1928, April, pp. 2-3.

needs must also laugh at Shakespeare, whose heroes not only fight in metre, but even die to it."¹⁵

In addition to this, Tagore refers to the historical dances of Japan and writes that, "There words are also used, but all the movements and gestures are of the dance type, and they have a wonderful appeal. In dramas where the words are metrical, it is surely inconsistent to leave the movements realistic." Then regarding Hindu dramas he says that "our very words for dramas or play, nāṭaka, shows that dance was its essential feature."¹⁶

Unless we start with the conception that abhinaya is something allied to dancing, and meant for suggesting ideas and emotions to spectators, we shall never be able to appreciate such merit as Hindu plays might possess. Besides this, one should consider in detail the four different branches into which abhinaya has been divided, viz, āṅgika, vācika, āhārya, sāttvika.¹⁷

(i) Āṅgika abhinaya is the use of artistic gestures. Its rules regulate the actors' bearing, walk and movements of features and limbs.¹⁸ But consistently with the object which Hindu playes have, the forms of gestures and movements prescribed in manuals of abhinaya (such as the AD) are not quite realistic, and besides they are often made with reference to imaginary objects. For instance, the way of holding a flower by a beau, is not that in which it is ordinarily held, while a gesture may show that a bee is worrying a maiden though no actual bee is visible, and a particular movement of the body may show the ascending or descending from a place which may not actually be represented on the stage.¹⁹

Abhinaya means not only carrying out occasional directions of the playwright as regards the various special movements and positions which the dramatis personae are to assume, but also suggesting effectively to spectators the full aesthetic import of a play by suitably reproducing along with his speech or song, appropriate gestures codified in manuals of abhinaya. Even in carrying out the directions of the playwright the actors are to use gestures etc., as laid down in those manuals. All this will be clear from the following directions of Rāghavabhaṭṭa given in his commentary of the Śakuntalā (ed. Nirnayasagara), for depicting the vrkṣa-secana (watering plants), bhramara-bādhā (an attack by a bee) and viśāda (grief) etc. In these he has used the SR, a work later than the AD. (vide § 18). Rāghavabhaṭṭa's words are quoted below in translation.

Attack by a bee (bhramara-bādhā)—with the Vidhuta head, the Kampita lips and the turned down Tripatāka hand near the mouth.

Bashfulness in love-making (śṛṅgāralajjā)—with the Parāvṛtta head and the Lajjita eye.

Despair (viśāda)—with the Dhuta head and the Viṣaṇṇa eye.

Avoiding an attempt to raise one's chin (mukhonnayana-parihāra) with the Parāvṛtta head and the Vinigūhita lips.

Plucking of flowers (puṣpāvacaṇa)—with the Uttāna Arāla left hand and the Haṃsāsya right hand taken side-ways.

Making toilet (prasādhana)—putting the Tilaka mark on the forehead with the ringfinger of the Tripatāka hand, wearing the garland with the Parāṇmukha and the Sandaṃśa (right and left) hands, putting on Tāṭakas (ornament of upper arms) and ear-rings with the two Bhramara hands, and painting lac-dye on the feet with the Kartāri-mukha hand, and wearing a ring with Haṃsāsya and the Cyūta-sandaṃśa hands.

Obstacle in walking (gatibhaṅga)—with the Ūrudhṛtā Cārī.

Coming down from a high place (avataraṇa)—with the Gaṅgāvatarāṇa.

Mounting a chariot (rathādhirohaṇa)—with the Ūrdhavajaṇu Cārī.

The code of gestures and movements prescribed for the different limbs was binding on the nāṭa; so much so, that in the matter of gesticulation the term 'originality' can scarcely be applied to him, for what is required of him, is not his own interpretation of a play, but a representation of the same in accordance with the prescribed rules. The ideal Hindu playwright, as far as the language and the development of the plot are concerned, is to leave no obscurity which would require the interpretation of the nāṭa, but in building up his characters, he (i. e., the playwright) is to touch only those characteristic moods which, properly represented, would suggest the full aesthetic value he desires to impart to them.

To the nāṭa the play is, as it were, a lyrical poem, and the abhinaya manuals, an account of the notes to be used in setting the former to music. As the musician has neither the liberty nor the necessity of inventing new notes or haphazardly applying the existing ones, so the nāṭa has no room for being original by inventing gestures etc., for that is the business of masters (ācārya) of the art who know the theory and practice thoroughly.²⁰ In consequence of this, the spectators were spared the necessity of putting up with fanciful interpretations which individual nāṭas might make at their cost. In spite of this the nāṭa had sufficient scope for free grace and fitting variations on the usual play of limbs.

(ii) Vācika abhinaya may roughly be called the use of proper pronunciation, modulation of voice, accent and rhythm.²¹ According to some Hindu theorists it occupies the first place in a play, because all other branches of abhinaya viz., āṅgika, āhārya and sāttvika, depended more on it than it does on them.²² But the meaning which they have for this vācika abhinaya is more extensive than the modern rules of proper dramatic delivery. The use of different dialects and proper forms of address to persons according to their rank or social status are also included. These rules of the Hindu theorists are very elaborate and well-adapted to bring out the lyrical qualities of a play.

(iii) Ābhārya abhinaya. The costume and the appearance of the naṭa help him in his work. They reveal the sex, race, sect or class, social or other position of the character represented. The part which costume and physical decorations etc., play, is called the ābhārya abhinaya.²³

(iv) Sāttvika abhinaya. This is the representation of eight psychic conditions arising from the vital principle itself. These eight conditions are: motionlessness, perspiration, horripilation, change of voice, trembling, change of colour, tears and fainting.²⁴ But as these are sometimes to be expressed with the help of suitable gestures or movements of limbs, some modern scholars could, however, discover no distinction between the sāttvika and āṅgika abhinayas.²⁵ But their confusion is due to overlooking the fact that while the āṅgika abhinaya is mostly on external things, and represents ideas conveyed by words, and intellectual changes in a man, the sāttvika abhinaya is a thing expressing the psyche; because the eight conditions enumerated above proceed from the inmost recess of the soul and pervade the whole body. Owing to their distinctive and deep-seated nature, they (i. e. the eight conditions) form a separate branch of the abhinaya. But in spite of this possible distinction, it cannot be denied that the sāttvika abhinaya has every chance of degenerating into the āṅgika abhinaya when the naṭa lacks the genius as well as proper training in his art.

9. IMPORTANCE OF THE STUDY OF ABHINAYA. It has been rightly observed that no play is more than potentially such till it is acted. Hence in order to understand a play properly, one must see it produced on the stage in the manner in which the author designed it to be done. If this, however, be not possible one should at least know thoroughly that particular manner, otherwise there is every chance of misunderstanding it, in spite of sympathetic imagination or artistic taste. The Hindu plays, as far as our knowledge goes, cannot be said to have been properly appreciated by modern critics, merely because they were studied without adequate attention to the technique of their representation on the stage. Those who have made any generalisation on their value, depended merely on the treatises on the literary technique of those plays (such as the Daśarūpa or the Sāhityadarpaṇa), which themselves are not fully intelligible unless they are read along with treatises on abhinaya and other branches of the prayoga-vijñāna (art of production). That this latter subject has much to do with the proper appreciation of Hindu plays has been recognized by few scholars and emphasized by none. The few stage-conventions which some of them picked out as grotesque or meaningless, were a hindrance rather than a help to such an appreciation. Hence it is clear that the Hindu art of abhinaya requires to be investigated more carefully. And its practical details as well as the principles underlying them should be subjected to a most exhaustive scrutiny.

(i) Abhinaya and Painting. In the Viṣṇu-dharmottara,²⁶ it has been said that the canons of painting are difficult to be understood without an acquaintance with the canons of dancing. This remark is not intelligible to one who is not aware of the fact that dancing includes abhinaya, and was to a great extent responsible for its origin, although in later times it came to be associated more or less exclusively with the performance of nāṭyas. An acquaintance with abhinaya, in fact, gives the student of painting a more or less definite idea about the postures of men according to changes (physical, mental and spiritual) to which they are subjected by the different objects surrounding them. The value of a treatise on abhinaya lies in the fact that it presents to us a more or less systematic and elaborate study of the possible artistic gestures which, when reproduced on the stage by naṭas, may evoke rasa in the spectators. Anyone who has some idea about the technique of painting will understand how the descriptions of varying gestures by head, hands eyes, lips and feet etc., would help a student of painting to acquire skill in depicting the human form in its endless variety of poses. In fact the canons of painting such as are given in the Viṣṇu-dharmottara and the Abhilaṣitāratha-cintāmaṇi, give nothing but the anatomy of the human form considered in its motionless condition, while the canons of dancing (which includes abhinaya) consider the human form in its rhythmic movement for the purpose of evoking some rasa, and can thus vivify the knowledge of that anatomy by revealing its artistic possibilities.

(ii) Abhinaya and Sculpture. The *Viṣṇu-dharmottara*²⁷ is also of opinion that one who does not know the canons of painting, cannot be acquainted with the canons of making images. This will be clear to one who has understood the relation between painting and abhinaya given above. And a study of the AD may be expected to remove all doubt in this matter.

²⁷ Part III ch. 2. In connection with rules for making images the Samarāṅgaṇasūtradhāra (vol. II pp. 301ff. of the GOS Edition) describes the hand gestures etc., almost in the language of the NS (IX. 4ff), ABHINAYA: ITS HISTORY.

10. THE ORIGIN OF ABHINAYA. (a) Abhinaya, though closely connected with rūpakas or nāṭyas, is not restricted to them alone in its application. An essential part of nṛtya (pantomimic dance) is abhinaya; and gītas (songs) are made perfect when they are accompanied by proper āṅgika (physical) gestures to suggest their spirit. Hence it is natural that abhinaya apart from nāṭya should have its own history to which gīta (song), nṛtta (dance) and nṛtya contributed their part. Not only the composite nature of its growth, but also the different social phenomena which influenced the entire history of abhinaya, should be taken into account for its proper comprehension. For instance, rituals, folk-songs, folk-dance and folk-plays contributed to the growth and development of this art as well as of nāṭya (drama) itself. Different masters of the art of abhinaya who flourished in course of its long history, did also do their part in this matter; but at this distant date we lack adequate materials to study accurately either the relative priority or the importance of the different forces which in some way or other might have influenced the growth of abhinaya, we shall consider below only a few facts which reveal the characteristics that abhinaya has in common with other social institutions, sacred or secular as a means of suggesting the complex nature of its growth.

(i) Gīta and Abhinaya. It is a well-known fact that at a certain stage of their evolution, gīta, (vocal music) nṛtta (including nṛtya) and vādyā (instrumental music) came very rightly to be considered not only homogeneous but also mutually dependent. The word saṃgīta which includes these three arts and which has often been mistranslated as merely 'music' was an invention belonging to this stage. This inclusion is of help in understanding the connexion between gīta and nṛtta (nṛtya). And abhinaya, as will be seen later on very clearly, is connected with nṛtya. Therefore, the relation between gīta and abhinaya becomes clear. In practice also, the same relation is to be seen even now; for Indian singers, even when they are not dancers, usually accompany their singing with gesticulation. "This is of two kinds, of which the first, quite distinct from what is spoken of in the present treatise, is a hand movement reflecting the musical form; the reflection of empathy (sādhārāṇī), is sometimes very impressive or graceful, but not less often grotesque. The second, known as bhāu-batānā or 'shewing of moods' is of the type here described as abhinaya, or 'gesture' and differs from (abhinaya applied to) Nāṭya only in the greater relative importance of the music and the words".¹

(ii) Nṛtya and Abhinaya. The indispensable connection between nṛtya and abhinaya can be gathered from Dhanañjaya's description of the former. He says nṛtya is the representation of concepts conveyed by words (padārthābhinaya).² The description of Śārṅgadeva establishes the connexion more clearly. He says 'that which expresses bhāvas (States) by means of āṅgika (gesture) is nṛtya'.³ But according to Catura-Kallinātha, the commentator of the SR, āṅgika in this place includes vācika as well as sāttvika abhinaya.⁴ But there are, as will be seen later on, other factors which contributed their share to the development of nāṭya and abhinaya, although the contribution of nṛtya is surely the more important. This importance will be better understood when we observe the fact that abhinaya has almost always been discussed in the works on saṃgīta in the chapter devoted to nṛtta (nṛtya), and works like AD which treat only of abhinaya, look to this as an art concerning solely the nartakī (dancing girl).⁵ This mode of treatment probably points to the fact that abhinaya first came to be studied and systematized in connexion with nṛtya, and hence the sign of that dependence even in works prepared much later when it came to be largely associated with nāṭya.

The relation of abhinaya to nāṭya (drama) may be said to have become more intimate through the relation of the latter to nṛtya, for the NŚ, the well-known work on nāṭya and the musical arts, clearly lays down that a play should be so written that dance can be added to it.⁶ It is this prescribed association of nṛtya with Hindu plays that entitled the latter to the name nāṭya which means literally a thing to be danced, or performed by a nāṭa (originally a dancer, subsequently the performer of nāṭya). Indeed, it has already been mentioned that an expression like nāṭakam nanṛtuḥ (danced a drama) was used in the Harivaṃśa.⁷

(iii) Ritual and Abhinaya. (a) Vedic. The part which the Vedic ritual might have played in the origin of Hindu plays has been ably discussed by more than one scholar.⁸ In spite of there being no unanimity of opinion among them all, it may be said that the ritual of the Vedic age contributed, even if it might be to a small extent, to the origin of abhinaya. The testimony of the NŚ, in this connection, that nāṭya as a whole has sprung from the four Vedas, and that specially abhinaya can trace its origin from the Yajurveda, may not be lightly dismissed.⁹ And also the fact that the Vedic hymns, at least Sāmans, are still chanted mostly with some kind of gesture, should be remembered in this connection.

(b) Epic Recitation and Abhinaya. The recitation of epic poems such as the Rāmāyaṇa, the Mahābhārata, the Bhāgavata and other Purāṇas, which generally takes place on the occasion of religious festivals, has some kind of abhinaya associated with it. For Kathakas¹⁰ just like good orators, are required to make a liberal use of gestures for impressing the audience with what they deliver. The theory of the origin of Hindu plays from epic recitation which is otherwise justified, receives an additional support from this fact too.

(c) Tāntrik Mudrās and Abhinaya. Tāntrik mudrās (ritual gestures of the hand) have some resemblance to the manual gestures used in abhinaya. This however, is not sufficient to allow us to suggest any clear connection of Tāntrik ritual with the origin of abhinaya.

(d) Folk-arts and Abhinaya. Folk-songs, folk-dance and folk-plays also contain some elements of abhinaya in them. Popular ballads of ancient times may also be supposed to have been sung with some sort of crude abhinaya, and similarly folk-dances and folk-plays also were probably accompanied by this. These folk-arts can be witnessed even now-a-days in the Gambhīrā, the Gājan and the Nilapūjā (of Bengal)¹¹ and the Rāmālīlā (of the Uttar Pradesh), thus affording some material for us to arrive at their historical prototypes. The Mahāvratā ceremony of the Vedic times might be a trace of their early existence.¹²

11. THE DEVELOPMENT OF ABHINAYA. (a) Before the time of Kālidāsa. As the word prekṣā used in Kautilya's Arthaśāstra has been taken to mean a dramatic show it may be assumed that abhinaya was in vogue in the 4th century B. C. At the time of Patañjali (c. 140 B.C.) too, the art seems to have been largely practised.¹³ In the age that followed, this art made further progress, the first testimony of which is the fragments of Aśvaghōṣa's plays. This great Buddhist poet is placed by Sten Konow in about 150 A. C., but Keith is for placing him earlier.¹⁴

In the Saptaśatakam (Saptaśatī or Sattasai) of Hāla alias Sātavāhana nāḍaa (nāṭaka) and puvvaramṅga (pūrovaraṅga) are mentioned side by side.¹⁵ The word pūrvaraṅga, being a technical word connected with the production of a nāṭya on the stage, shows that the art of abhinaya was at that time in a more advanced stage than in the age of Patañjali. As for the date of Hāla, Winternitz says that he must have reigned either in 1st or 2nd century A. C., at the earliest.¹⁶ The Avadānaśataka, a Sanskrit Buddhist work describes the performance of a Buddhist nāṭaka. The description of the nāṭaka in that work, is enough to show that the age which produced the work witnessed considerable development of the art of abhinaya. The mention of the word 'naṭcārya' in the sense of master-naṭa or the professor who trained the naṭas (and was consequently the director of a party of naṭas), gives us good reason to presume that the art of a naṭa had by that time become important enough in the eyes of the people to accord to its venerable teacher the title of ācārya which was generally to given a master of sacred works like the Vedas and the Vedāṅgas etc., This Avadānaśataka is a work considered to have been written between 200 A. C. and 253 A.C.¹⁷

More copious reference to abhinaya is to be found in the Harivaṃśa.¹⁸ The word abhinaya with its derivatives has been used in it nearly a dozen times. This fact together with mention of technical words like nāndī, nepathya, and vidūṣaka gives us ample ground for presuming that the work was written at a time when the art of abhinaya reached a high degree of development. The lower limit of the date of the Harivaṃśa varies between 200 A. C. and 400 A. C.¹⁹ There should, however, be no objection to placing the work in the second century, for the Bhāsa-plays including words like cārī, gati used in connexion with abhinaya have been assigned to 300 A. C.

(b) In the age of Kālidāsa. The improvement made by Kālidāsa in the extant drama of his time consisted in assigning a more or less prominent place to song and dance. In this respect he probably made a departure from the style of his predecessors. It seems that in the beginning Kālidāsa with this innovation was rather afraid of the admirers of old masters like Bhāsa, Saumilla and others; hence, in spite of the firm self-reliance which always characterizes a great genius, he uses song and dance very cautiously in the Mālvikāgnimitra. The success of this which must have raised him in the estimation of his contemporaries, convinced him of the fitness of his method, which he applied more freely in the Vikramorvaśī the proper production of which would enable one to see the best specimen of the art of abhinaya.

The value of Kālidāsa's innovation from the standpoint of the art of abhinaya is immense. Hindu plays—poems in their conception and lyrical in their character—became after him unique spectacles in which the lyrical element was given the fullest prominence by the more important scope given to song and dance.

(c) After Kālidāsa. The art of abhinaya does not seem to have made much much advance after Kālidāsa. For the plays of post-Kālidāsian age are composed more or less after the manner of that great genius. But it is sure that from time to time gestures were studied afresh, new gestures were added to their number, and sometimes the old ones also were slightly modified. All these we shall see below under the literature on abhinaya.

12. THE LITERATURE ON ABHINAYA. The treatise on abhinaya which can be called the earliest is, the Naṭasūtras of Śilālin and Kṛṣāśva mentioned by Pāṇini (c. 600 B.C.). We do not exactly know what these contained, but if any conjecture on the subject is allowable, we may presume in the light of a study of the later works on nṛtya and abhinaya that Śilālin's and Kṛṣāśva's work contained among other things a description—probably classified—of gestures and postures etc., and where and how the naṭa was to use them,

The NŚ which among other things treats of abhinaya, is thus the earliest available work dealing with the subject. It has sometimes been assumed that the NŚ in its earliest form was a sūtra-text—meaning by the term a work consisting of highly compressed prose formulae such as the Aṣṭādhyāyī of Pāṇini. If such actually existed it might have been earlier than the BhA which, as its abridgement shows, was in all probability a versified work. But we are afraid that the above assumption is based on a very weak foundation. Though the NŚ has often been referred to as the Nāṭyasūtra and its author the Bharatamuni of dubious existence, has been called the sūtrakāra, it is highly doubtful if anything except the present NŚ written in metres or its prototype of a like nature, ever existed. A careful examination of the word sūtra will support this view. It is on the basis of this word and of the word kārikā occurring in the text of the NŚ (VI, 11. 31) that one makes the above assumption. As the meaning of the word kārikā is quite plain, we are to discuss only the meaning of the sūtra. It is generally believed, and perhaps very firmly, that this word means a work containing highly compressed prose formulae on any subject such as the Aṣṭādhyāyī or the Brahmasūtra. An authority like Abhinavagupta deals a cruel blow to such a belief. In his comments on NŚ. VI. 11. 31, he is not for distinguishing between kārikā and the sūtra. In the maṅgalācaraṇa of the Abhinava-bhāratī, he has called the very NŚ the Bharata-sūtra. Together with this fact, one should remember that the Ṛk-prātiśākhya written entirely in verse, has been called the Pārśada-sūtra. This also is noteworthy that the Southern Buddhists called their scriptures (written in prolix prose) suttas (= sūtras) and the Northern Buddhists too call some of their metrical treatises sūtras (e.g., the Madhyānta-vibhāgasūtra of Maitreya-nātha). The sūtra (thread) which runs through flowers in a garland seems to have led to a metaphorical use of the word. Hence sūtra means merely central principles or essential rules. On taking this view of the meaning of the word sūtra we may consider the NŚ (in metre) to be the earliest available work on abhinaya.

Then come the Agnipurāṇa and the Viṣṇudharmottara, which make room for a treatment of abhinaya in their body. The date of the Viṣṇudharmottara has not been critically discussed by any authority, but it may be that this work belongs to a period not later than 500 A. C.²⁰ And the Agnipurāṇa has been placed in the latter half of the 8th century.²¹

ABHINAYADARPAṆA

13. SCOPE OF THE WORK. The AD treats in details the āṅgika abhinaya which includes gestures, postures and movements dependent on feet. The exclusive attention paid to the āṅgika abhinaya is due to its importance with reference to the training of the nāṭya and nṛtya.¹ The same importance may be said to have been recognized by Amarasiṃha the famous lexicographer, for he mentions in his Koṣa only āṅgika abhinaya and the sāttvika, primarily dependent on the former.²

(a) Gestures. To understand the proper value of gestures which furnish the basis of the āṅgika abhinaya one should observe their application in other department of social activities. Gestures are first met with in the languages of primitive people. It is sure that they played an important role in the evolution of human speech. A gesture is used by mutes and even by others when they meet persons speaking a language unintelligible to them. And often it so happens that some ideas cannot be adequately expressed or explained without some gesticulation accompanying words spoken. This clearly shows the power of suggestion that is inherent in gesture. It is no wonder, therefore, that they were combined with dance—the first-born among arts of mankind—and have been endowed with rhythm to call forth rasa in persons witnessing dance. But they have other uses besides this. The ritualistic use of gestures known as mudrās is an instance of it. Sādhakas (devotees) of the Tāntrik school use them. According to some they are meant to emphasize and intensify their thought, and thus giving them the bliss (mud) of meditation. But gestures used in abhinaya and nṛtya differ from mudrā. And nṛtya and abhinaya also have different principles of utilizing them. For in nṛtya gestures are used by themselves, whereas in nāṭya they are used in accompaniment of words, to suggest their meaning.

But whatever might be the difference of principle regarding the application of gestures in nṛtya, abhinaya and mudrā they agree in one respect: in all those cases they tend often to be artistic and symbolical, rather than natural and simple. After the introductory matters (1-48), the AD treats the following kinds of gesture:—

- i. Nine gestures of the head (49-65).
- ii. Eight gestures of eyes (66-79).
- iii. Four gestures of the neck (79-87)
- iv. Twenty-eight gestures by one hand (87-165) and four additional gestures (166-172)
- v. Twenty-three gestures by both the hands (172-203)
- vi. Gestures for representing gods (204-215)
- vii. Gestures for representing the ten Avatāras of Viṣṇu (216-225)
- viii. Gestures for representing different castes etc. (226-231)
- ix. Gestures for representing various relations (231-244)

x. Gestures of hand for dance in general, and the method of moving hands in dance (244-249).

xi. Gestures for representing nine planetary deities (250-258)

(b). Postures and Gait. After treating gestures, the AD treats of postures and various movements of the body depending principally on feet (259ff.). It is a plain fact that the carriage of the body and its various movements often characterize a person. On assuming this, the theorists of the art of abhinaya have codified postures, and movements of the body depending on feet.

i. Maṇḍalas and Sthānakas or sixteen modes of standing and resting (260-282).

ii. Utplavanas of five kinds or leaping movements (282-289)

iii. Bhramarīs of seven kinds or flight movements (298-332)

iv. Cāris, and Gatis or eighteen kinds of gait (298-332)

One peculiarity is noticed in the treatment of the above items. Unlike that of gestures definitions of various postures (except in the case of Sthānakas) and feet-movements are not accompanied by their viniyoga (application). An explanation of this fact is available at the end of AD in the following terms:—

“Maṇḍalas, Utplavanas, Bhramarīs, Cāris and Gatis according to their relation to one another, are endless in number and variety. Their uses in dance and drama are to be learnt from the śāstra, tradition of the school and through the favour of good people, and not otherwise (322-324.)” This probably shows that at a very time when no work was compiled, the uses already recorded in case of the above movements, depended solely on the principles known to teachers. Probably for this reason we do not get them in writing in the AD which follows a very early tradition.

14. THE ABHINAYADARPANA AND THE NATYASTRA, Bharata-Śāstra (not the Bharata-Nāṭyaśāstra) has been many times referred to as an authority in the AD, and the extant NŚ in its chapters VIII-XI, treats of the āṅgika abhinaya (gesture). Hence a comparison of the two works becomes necessary.

(a) Head-gesture. According to the NŚ. (Ch. VIII) there are thirteen gestures of head while Nandikeśvara has only nine. Among them five gestures have common names in both the works; besides this, the names of two gestures agree partially.

A comparison of the names, definitions and vinīyoga (application) of the head gestures in the two works shows that the gestures named Adhomukha, Ālolita, (= Lolita), Dhuta, Kampita, Parāvṛtta and Parivāhita are defined in each work in a similar manner. As regards their applications also the two works have a considerable agreement; besides this, the definition of the gesture Udvāhita in the AD, agrees substantially with the Utkṣipta of the NŚ.

(b) Eye-gestures. According to the NŚ. (Ch. VIII. 101 ff.), there are three classes of eye-gestures, such as, (i) eyes for expressing eight rasas, (ii) eyes for expressing sthāyi-bhāvas, and (iii) eyes for expressing sañcāri-bhāvas. Each of the classes (i) and (ii) in their turn has eight varieties, while the class (iii) has twenty varieties. But the AD (66ff.) is not so elaborate in its classification or division of these gestures. It enumerates only eight kinds of them. The classification in the two works has not any common name.

(c) Neck-gestures. The NŚ (Ch. VIII. 164ff), enumerates nine kinds of these gestures while the AD (79ff) gives four kinds of them. The two enumerations possess no common names.

(d) Hand-gestures. Though the NŚ and AD agree in classifying the hand-gestures into three classes, and though these three classes possess many common names, they differ as regards the number in each class as well as in their definition and application. Let us consider them separately.

(1) Single-hand gestures: According to the NŚ (Ch. IX), there are twenty-four gestures in this class, while in the AD, their number is twenty-eight. In both the works twenty-two gestures have common names. Their description and application too in the two works have considerable agreement.

The comparison of the two works on this point yields these facts:

- i. The definition of the following thirteen gestures is similar in both the works:

Patāka, Tripatāka, Ardhacandra, Arāla, Śukatuṇḍa, Muṣṭi, Sīkhara Padmakōśa, Sarpasīras, Mṛgaśīrṣa, Catura, Bhramara, Mukula.

- ii. The following gestures have some points of agreement as regards their application. The number of those points varies in each case, and it has been noted against the name of each gesture mentioned below.

Patāka (2), Tripatāka (2), Ardhacandra (1), Muṣṭi (1), Kaṭakāmu-kha (4) Padmakōśa (3) Sarpasīras (5) Mukula (2),

- iii. Except in the cases mentioned in (ii) above the vinīyoga (application) of the gesturas vary in the two works.

- iv. The definitions of the following gestures vary in both the works: Kartarīmukha, Kaṭakāmukha, Kapittha, Sūcī, Kāṅgula, Alapadma (Alapallava), Haṃsapakṣa, Sandaṃśa, Tāmracūḍa.

- v. The following gestures of the NŚ, are subdivided according to their vinīyogas (uses) and special instructions have been given as to how a gesture is to be used in different groups of things: Patāka, Tripatāka, Arāla, Sūcīmukha, Catura, Sandaṃśa.

(2) Combined-hand gestures. The NŚ (Ch. IX) names thirteen gestures of this class, while the AD gives twenty-three.

As a result of the comparison of the combined-hand gestures named similarly in the two works, we have the following facts:

- i. The following gestures in both the works have substantially the same definitions, and their applications also agree mutually to a great extent; Añjali, Kapota, Karkaṭa and Puṣpapuṭa.

- ii. The gesture named Puṣpapuṭa is almost similarly defined in both the works,

- iii. The remaining three gestures are differently defined and applied in the two works.

(3). Nṛtta-bastas. According to the NŚ. (Ch. IX. 173ff.) they are twenty-seven in number and different from the single-hand and combined-hand gestures. But their number in the AD is thirteen, and they are not anything different from the single or combined-hand gestures; for, six of them (Patāka, Tripatāka, Śikhara, Kapittha, Alapadma and Haṃsāsya) are the same as the single-hand gestures of the same name, and the remaining seven (Añjali, Svastika, Ḍolā, Kaṭakā-vardhana, Śakaṭa, Pāśa and Kīlaka) are the same as the combined-hand gestures of the same name. Thus, whatever might be the number of gestures in each group, the total number of hand-gestures are sixty-four according to the NŚ, and fifty-one according to the AD.

(c) Cārī. According to the NŚ, Cārīs³ are thirty-two in number and are divided into two classes; (i) earthly (bhauma) and (ii) heavenly (ākāśagāmī). But the AD, has only eight Cārīs and they constitute only one class by themselves. The two works have no name common in their Cārīs.

(f) Maṇḍala. According to the NŚ, Maṇḍalas⁴ are twenty in number and are divided into two classes: (i) earthly (bhauma) and (ii) heavenly (ākāśika), but the AD gives only ten of them and does not classify them at all. The two works have no common names in their maṇḍalas.

15. THE ABHINAYADARPANA AND THE BHARATARNAVA; Both these works are ascribed to Nandikeśvara, and the authors of the two works may be identical. The tradition recorded in the opening verses of the text used for the MG says that the AD (vide notes on śl. 1), is an abridgement of the BhA. But nothing like this is to be found in any of the five manuscripts collated for the present edition. Hence in the beginning we disbelieved it. However, being informed that a manuscript named the BhA, exists in the library of Bhandarkar Oriental Institute, Poona, we procured a loan of it for placing our conclusion on a surer basis. This led to a through examination of the same work, which treats of abhinaya as well as nṛtya. And the following are the results:

3 See NŚ. XI. 1ff.

4 See NŚ. XI. 4.

The Poona MS of the so-called BhA, which we have called P appears, to be a different work or at best a recasting of the old work of the same name. In the body of the work the following passage occurs: ālāpacārīm vakṣye'ham...Bharatārṇavam-āmanthya.....

This adds to one's doubt as to the so-called BhA., being the original work of Nandikeśvara, and shows that it is a compilation which depended on his work as well as that of the so-called Bharata i.e. his Śāstra.

At the end of the chapter referred on miscellaneous hands it writes bharatārtha-candrikāyām bhūdhara-rāja-dubittṛcitāyām, and the colophon, which follows this, is (f. 42) iti śrī-Nandikeśvara-viracita-Pārvatī-prayukta-bharatārtha-candrikā-nānārtha-prakaraṇam samaptam-āsīt.

Read together with the superscription (nandibharatokta-saṃkīrṇā-dhyāyaḥ) at the head of this section, the above colophon offers a puzzle and again adds to our doubt as to the so-called BhA, being identical with Nandikeśvara's work of the same name. It may be altogether a different work of the name of the Bharatārtha-candrikā depending on Nandikeśvara as well as the so-called Bharata for its material.

This MS however, gives the name of the work as the BhA. The discoverer of the MS, it is sure, depended on this only, for labelling the work as the BhA. These various ways of describing the work probably shows it to be something other than the original work of Nandikeśvara.

In its treatment of hand-gestures of the first two kinds (asaṃyuta and saṃyutabastas), P resembles to a great extent the AD. The number of asaṃyuta-bastas (single-hand gestures) is twenty-eight in the AD, whereas their number is twenty-seven in the P. Of these, twenty-six gestures have similar definition and description in both the works. The number of saṃyuta-bastas (combined-hand gestures) in the AD, is twenty-three while in the P their number is sixteen. Of these, seven have common names in the two works, and the definition and application of six only have a substantial agreement in the both.

But the treatment of nytta-bastas in the P, is different from that of the AD. Unlike the AD, the P describes a new set of hand-gestures called nytta-bastas. In this regard, the latter work bears resemblance to the extant NS. The number of nytta-bastas are sixteen in the P, whereas their number is no less than twenty-seven in the NS. Of these, twelve common name are found in both the works, but their definitions and applications differ.⁵

16. THE ABHINAYADARPANA AND THE SAMGITARATNAKARA. The SR being evidently a work posterior in date to the AD, it is not necessary to compare the two. It goes without saying that SR which was compiled from various sources such as the NS and AD, has treated gestures etc., more elaborately (vide SR. 1, 4-12, 14-16, 21-23, 40-43, 75, 55-56, 72, 111, 145, 187, 189-190. Ch. VII). But it should be mentioned that the author of the SR, has from time to time retained the very language of the source-books.

Besides the above, the SR, in other cases too bear clear evidence of an influence of the AD.

17. THE STYLE AND METHOD OF TREATMENT OF THE AD. The present work is written in a simple style. It is even simpler than the chapters which the NS, devoted to nytta and abhinaya. There are some grammatical anomalies⁶ and stock phrases like kīrtitaḥ purvasūribhiḥ, ucyate nāṭyakovidaiḥ, proktaḥ nṛtya-karmaviśāradaḥ are very often used for filling up the verse i.e, for pādapūraṇa.

Nandikeśvara's method of treatment in the AD, is analytical. He considers the gestures of different limbs separately, though in actual abhinaya, some of the limbs cannot have independent movement⁷. And moreover the gesture of one single limb is never used, except for a short time, to the exclusion of the rest. In the NS, the synthetic method has been combined with the analytical one. For, in it we find not only the enumeration of the gestures of different limbs, but also their combination in the form of karaṇas and *aṅgabāras*⁸.

5 See the treatment of the nytta-bastas in the NS. (Ch. IX 173ff.)

6 See notes on ślokas 31 and 34.

7 See śls, 89-93 of the AD.

18. THE AUTHOR OF THE WORK. It is not easy to say anything with certainty about the life and times of Nandikeśvara, the reputed author of the AD. This name has been found not only in connexion with abhinaya, but also in relation to works on various other subjects, such as, Tāla, Rasa, Yoga, Tantra, Kāma-śāstra, Pūrva-Mīmāṃsā and Liṅgāyet Śaivism. The three works named *Tāla-lakṣaṇa*⁹, Tālādi-lakṣaṇa and Tālābhinaya-lakṣaṇa have been ascribed to N. Rājaśekhara in his Kāvya-mīmāṃsā cites one N. as a writer on rasa. There is a work named *Yoga-tārāvalī*¹⁰ from the hands of one N. The *Nandikeśvara-tilaka*¹¹ has N. frankly as its eponymous author. The Pañcaśāyaka mentions this name as a writer on the Kāmaśāstra, and Vātsyāyana, too, in his sūtra refers to one Nāndī whom Aufrecht is inclined to identify with N. The *Prabhākara-vijaya*¹² a Pūrva-Mīmāṃsā work has also one N. as its author. Besides this, the author of the *Liṅgadhāraṇa-candrika*¹³ a work on Liṅgāyet Śaivism is N. Surely we cannot see a single person in all these Nandikeśvaras. But it is probable that N, in connexion with tāla, and abhinaya was the same person, and he might have been different from the writers on Yoga, Tantra and Pūrva-Mīmāṃsā.

The testimony of Śārṅgadeva, the author of the SR which quotes passages from the AD, seems to corroborate the first part of the above view; for, according to him, N was an authority on saṃgīta, that is, he made some contribution to the art which includes tāla and abhinaya. It is difficult to say whether N the writer on ars amatoria was identical with the writer on saṃgīta of the same name. But as the Chapter XXV of the NS dealing with courtezans can be considered an integral part of the original work, one can say that the identity of the two authors is not at all improbable. However, any decision on the point being very uncertain we shall consider here N merely as a writer on saṃgīta, and as such he was a mortal human being and not a god of the same name with whom popular imagination in course of time tended to identify him. He was possibly a follower of Śiva.

An account of the Liṅgapurāṇa shows that Nandikeśvara the attendant of Śiva¹⁴ was originally a mortal—the son of a blind woman, named Silāda who prayed to gods for an immortal son and was given by Śiva a son named Nandī. This Nandī came afterward to be known as Nandikeśvara and was immortalized by Śiva as the chief of his gaṇas.

Mm. Ramakrishna Kavi identifies Nandin or Nandikeśvara with Taṇḍu. According to him N was the author of Nandīśvarasaṃhitā, the whole of which work is extinct now except a chapter on histrionics¹⁵, and this chapter on histrionics is probably the AD. In the absence of sufficient proof in support of this statement, we may consider this as a more plausible suggestion based on similarity of names.

19. THE PLACE OF NANDIKESVARA. The god named Nandikeśvara being popular in some parts of southern India, our author of the same name seems to have been an inhabitant of that part of the country.

20. THE TIME OF NANDIKESVARA. If the suggestion of Mm. Ramakrishna Kavi who identifies N with the author of ¹⁵ The Quarterly Journal of the Andhra Hist. Research Society Vol. III, pp. 25-26. Nandīśvara-saṃhitā like the Manu-saṃhitā may have been the work of an author other than Nandikeśvara.

Nandīśvara-saṃhitā, can be accepted, a guess may be made about the date of our author. For, N is quoted by Mataṅga, a writer on saṃgīta, and may probably be anterior to the latter by nearly a century. The date of Mataṅga can be roughly fixed, for, he is mentioned in the Tamil work named Silappadikaraṇa which has been assigned the 5th century A.G. Hence, Mataṅga who was more or less a century earlier than the writer of the Tamil work, can be placed in the 4th century. This gives the date of N who was perhaps a century earlier than Mataṅga, as the third century A.C.

21. THE ANTIQUITY OF THE WORK. The AD is said to be an abridgement of the BhA, of the exact nature of which we practically know nothing. And besides this there is the Nandīśvara-saṃhitā which probably claims the AD, as one of its chapters. Hence, the work in the present state of our knowledge cannot be placed as early as the 300 A.C. the probable time for N.

Lack of sufficient materials has made the determination of the date of the AD a very difficult problem. We shall, however, attempt to give below our reasons for a tentative date on the basis of available materials.

The lower limit to the date is to be had from the SR, a work written about 1247 A.C.¹⁶

There are passages common to the AD and the SR. The fact that the SR mentioned the name of N as one of the authorities on saṃgīta gives one occasion to presume that Śārṅgadeva the author of the SR, knew works like the AD, Tālābhinaya-lakṣaṇa, Tālalakṣaṇa and Bharatārṇava ascribed to N, and quoted from some of them. Hence, in the present case, SR appears to be the borrower from the AD. The opposite possibility seems to be non-existent on the following grounds:

It has been shown above that the treatment of gestures in the NS is partially different from the AD and more elaborate. And the treatment of these in the SR, is more or less in conformity with that of the NŚ, though the former has made its classification more elaborate. Thus in their treatment of gestures of AD and SR may be said to have slight agreement. But SR in its treatment of Cārīs, Sthānas (or Sthānakas) and Maṇḍalas is quite different from the AD which is less elaborate, or in other words, less developed. In view of these facts it does not appear probable that a work partially compiled from a later treatise like the SR, will be passed off in the name of an ancient master like N whom the author of the SR (Ch. I. 17), had to recognize as one of the authorities.

To ascertain the upper limit to the date of the AD, is however a comparatively difficult task. The only light which we may have in this from the NŚ which also treats of gestures is its chapters VIII-XII. As we have noticed before, the treatment of the gestures of head and hand in the NŚ, bears some resemblance to that of the AD. Now, what may be the reason of such a resemblance? An attempt to answer this question suggests the three following alternatives:

1. the AD is indebted to the NŚ, or
2. the NŚ is indebted to the AD, or
3. these two works are indebted to a common source.

For convenience' sake, let us discuss the first two of the alternatives together. It appears, on the following grounds, that the AD has not borrowed things from the NŚ.

- (a) The classification of the gestures of head and hand in the NŚ is more developed than that of the AD.
- (b) Instances in which these gestures can be used are also more numerous in the NŚ.

One, however, cannot be sure on this point. Though the general tendency of such things are towards development, it will be nothing extraordinary if one assumes that the AD might be the abridgment of an over-elaborated treatise. Indeed there is a story that the AD is an abridgment of the BhA the exact nature of which we do not know. So there may be a chance that the AD might be the borrower in this case. But the BhA has been ascribed to N himself, and besides this, there exists some dissimilarity in the two works as regards the application of the gestures which have substantially identical definitions. Besides this, the two works at times follow separate traditions of their own. (vide notes on sl. 15 and 35) These two facts taken together make one highly sceptic about the existence of such a possibility. This brings us to the second alternative, viz. the possibility of the NŚ being the borrower. The comparative elaboration of the classification of head and hand gestures probably points to such a direction. The difference in the application of the common gestures may again be cited here to the detriment of this theory. But one may explain away this difficulty by suggesting that the NŚ being a later work improved upon the things borrowed. This improvement can be noticed not only in increase of the number and variety of gestures, but also in the modification of application of certain gestures which such increase entailed. Instances of such improvement made on things, borrowed from earlier works, are not rare in the later Sanskrit literature. For example, the SR which is unquestionably a work later than the NŚ, has closely followed the NŚ, in its section on gestures, but at the same time it has added to the number of gestures given in the latter work, and has modified the uses of some of them. A study of the development of the number and variety of alaṃkāras will also reveal the same fact. The four alaṃkāras of the NŚ, increased in some of the latter-day treatises on Sanskrit poetics to almost four dozen. The increase of the number of nāyakas which was four according to the NŚ to sixteen in the Dāśarūpa, is also another fact of the same nature.

The above explanation gives us room for presumption that the source of the AD might be earlier than the extant NŚ, at least its chapters VIII and IX. And it cannot be said that there is no chance of this NŚ being a borrower from the work of N. Indeed we have something like an evidence of this borrowing of the NŚ, (from Nandin's work) in the shape of the colophon at the end of the Kāvya-mālā edition of the NŚ, which reads as samāptaścāyam (?) nandibha- ratasamgītapustakam. This colophon which has puzzled more than one scholar¹⁷ may be said to record the tradition about the growth of the extant redaction of the NŚ which possibly incorporated and amplified Nandikeśvara's original work as well as some earlier Nāṭyaśāstra. But as in the present state of our knowledge we do not know anything about either the original work of N or the supposed earlier NS, the probability of AD and the NŚ borrowing from a common source comes to the foreground.

Such being the case we cannot give any precise idea about the upper limit to the date of the AD. But in spite of this, the work does not seem to be quite recent. The treatment of the ten Avatāras of Viṣṇu made in the AD, probably points to this direction. In its enumeration of the Avatāras this work omits Buddha and gives Kṛṣṇa's name in his stead. This omission may be explained as an anti-Buddhistic bias of the author. But considering the fact that the Hindus raised Buddha to an Avatāra (incarnation) and respectfully mentioned him in works belonging to later ages, the theory of an anti-Buddhistic bias becomes weak. That the AD puts the name of Kṛṣṇa in the place of Buddha in its enumeration of the ten Avatāras allows one to presume that the work might have been written in an age when Buddha was still outside the Hindu pantheon. The Matsya-purāṇa (47.247) and the Bhāgavata-purāṇa (1.3.24),¹⁸ mention for the first time Buddha as one of the ten Avatāras of Viṣṇu. The lower limit to the date of the Matsyapurāṇa is the sixth century, and the Bhāgavatapurāṇa is probably of a later date. Thus one may be tempted to fix the upper limit to the date of the AD as the fifth century of the Christian era. But as we do not have any 17 Some have taken this colophon together with chapters (of the NŚ) on gīta and vādyā only and not with the entire work. Probably due to a wrong impression that saṃgīta means only 'music' they did not venture to connect the colophon with the whole of the NŚ.—a work on saṃgīta which is made up of the three things: gīta, vādyā and ṛtita.

18 Hemchandra Raychaudhury, Materials for the Study of the Early History of the Vaishnava Sect, Calcutta, 1920, page, 105.

definite knowledge about the evolution of the Avatāra theory through different ages, it would not be worth while to make any such statement.

Now, to sum up our investigation about the date of the AD, we may say that the work surely existed at the beginning of the thirteenth century, and it may have existed even a few centuries earlier. But its existence (in the present form) before fifth century is doubtful, though the kernel of the work may go back to a more remote period still.

NANDIKESVARA'S ABHINAYADARPANA

1. Saluation. We bow to the sāttvika Śiva whose āṅgika is the world, vācika is the entire language, and whose ābhārya is the moon and the stars etc.

2-7. Origin of Nāṭya. In the beginning Brahman gave the Nāṭya-veda to Bharata. Bharata together with groups of Gandharavas

1 This śloka of the AD has been taken by the author of the SR without any acknowledgement (VII. 1). This work however recognizes Nandikeśvara as an authority on saṃgīta which includes nṛtya and abhinaya (śl. 17, 21). Besides the first śloka, SR takes from the AD others as well. These have been pointed out in the Introduction § 16.

For meanings of sāttvika, āṅgika, vācika, and ābhārya see 11-14.

In this śloka Śiva has been compared with an actor whose means of expression is gesture and posture as well as voice and costume. One aspect of Hīnduism sees in him the Supreme Divinity who reveals himself through the world, the human speech and the starry firmament. The conception of Śiva as a cosmic dancer and actor (Nāṭa-rāja) is often to be met with in Hindu literature (cf. MG. p. 13). Two very beautiful examples of the same occur in Mudrārākṣasa, I. 2. and the Abhinava-bhāratī on NŚ. (GOS) IV. 260.

In the MG, maṅgala-śloka has been followed by a dialogue between Indra and Nandikeśvara (Indra-Nandikeśvara-saṃvāda) which does not occur in any ms. of the AD used for this edition. The substance of this dialogue is as follows: Once Indra met Nandikeśvara and said that he intended to gain victory over Nāṭaśekhara a Daitya dancer, and needed for this purpose authentic knowledge of the art of dancing. Then Indra was advised to listen to the Bharatārṇava composed by Nandikeśvara, in four thousand verses. This formidable extent of the work frightened Indra who begged Nandikeśvara to relate to him the entire law of dancing in a more concise form. The latter took pity on his exalted student and revealed to him the AD which was an abridgment of the Bharatārṇava. The story is evidently a later creation. (For any possible relation of the AD with the BhA, see Introduction § 15).

2-7 The MG omits this passage. The mythical account given here about and Apsarasas performed nāṭya, nṛtta and nṛtya before Śiva. Then Śiva having remembered his own majestic performance (dance), caused Bharata to be instructed in that [art] by his attendants (gaṇas). And before this, on account of his love [to Bharata] he gave to the latter, instructions in lāsya through Pārvatī. Knowing about tāṇḍava from Taṇḍu, sages spoke of it to mortals. Pārvatī on the other hand instructed Uṣā, the daughter of Bāṇa in lāsya. The latter taught [the art] to milk-maids of Dvārakā, and they taught this to women of Saurāṣṭra who in their turn taught this to women of other countries. In this manner this [art] was traditionally handed down, and has come to stay in the world.

7-11. Eulogy of Nāṭya. Brahman collected themes of recitation, abhinaya, vocal music and rasas from the Ṛk, Yaju, Sāma and Atharva Vedas respectively, and made rules for this art (śāstra) which grants dutiful life (dharmā), wealth (artha) and enjoyment (kāma) as well as liberation (mokṣa), and which promotes fame, self-confidence, fortune and cleverness, and which gives rise to peace, patience, liberality and pleasure, and does away with misery, affliction, sorrow and despondency. This [art] is valued even more than the bliss which persons meditating on Brahman (the Supreme Soul) experience. Otherwise how could it captivate the heart of sages like Nārada?

11-12. Variety of Dances (Nāṭana). Dance which has this four-fold aspect [of abhinaya] is of three kinds: nāṭya, nṛtta and nṛtya, according to sages like Bharata and others.

12-14. Occasions for Dance. Nāṭya and nṛtta should be witnessed particularly at the time of a festival. Those who wish for the origin and development of nāṭya, nṛtta and nṛtya agrees substantially with that given in the NŚ. IV. 5, 17.

7-11 cf. NŚ. I. 17, 105, 107.

11-12 The MG omits 11b. The four items in 11b, refer to pāṭhya, abhinaya, gita and rasa mentioned in 8.

12-14 Compare the NŚ, IV. 262-263.

The songs of Ālḥā along with dance and abhinaya are still found to be performed in U.P. at the birth of children (I owe this information to Prof. Kshiti

15. Nāṭya: Nāṭya or Nāṭaka which has some traditional story for its theme is an adorable [art].

Nṛtta: That [dance] which does not express States (bbāva) by means of abhinaya, is called nṛtta.

16. Nṛtya: That (dance) which suggests Sentiments (rasa) and States (bbāva), is called nṛtya. This dance is always fit to find a place in the court of great kings.

17. Characteristics of a President (sabbāpati). The President of the audience should be wealthy, intelligent, discriminating, an expert Mohan Sen of the Visvabharati). Only two generations ago Hindu women in some parts of Bengal celebrated births and marriages by songs and dance which, however, could be witnessed by all. This dance by ladies has now gone out of fashion, though girls may still be found who dance during their vratas, but recently attempts are being made to revive these old dances and introduce new ones. In many parts of Western India, dance is still greatly in vogue—the beautiful Garbā dance of Gujarati women is a living art, and is well-known. Dance as a domestic as well as religious institution still lingers over a great part of India.

15 Pūjyam means 'adorable' i.e. 'worthy of admiration'. The distinction made by the AD between nṛtta and nṛtya is not observed by the NS. This probably shows that the two works follow two divergent traditions. From the MG we learn that nṛtta 'is that form of dance which is void of Sentiment (rasa) and State (bbāva) (p. 4).'

16 In the MG this is followed by a division into lāsya and tāṇḍava, of which "Lāsya dancing is very sweet, and Tāṇḍava dancing is violent,"

17 Evidently the original of the MG reads this differently, and the reading there seems to be corrupt (p. 15). The sabbāpati means here the President of the assembly of spectators. His functions are to make pronouncement of the merit of a performance of a play and to distribute rewards to the sūtradhāra or leader of the troupe of dancers and actors. For another definition of sabbāpati see SR. VII. 1346-1350. It should be noted in this connexion that this honour of presiding over an assembly of spectators was given to one, on merit only.

in making awards, versed in the lore of music, versatile, celebrated, having pleasing virtues, well-acquainted with gestures which express desires and States, without envy or malice, well-disposed to people, possessed of rightful conduct, kind, patient, disciplined, well-versed in arts and proficient in abhinaya.

18. Characteristics of an Adviser (mantrin). The Advisers of such a President, who speak in an intelligent and dignified manner, are well-off and have a desire for fame, understand States (bhāva), are able to distinguish between merit and demerit, know the arts of love, are upright and well-versed in polity, have a kind heart, are good scholars, who are expert in distinguishing between different dialects, and possess a poetic faculty—such Advisers shine [in the assembly].

19. Character of the Audience (sabbā). The audience which is as it were, the Wishing Tree (kalpa-vṛkṣa) shines with the Vedas as its branches, the Śāstras as its flowers and the scholars as the bees adorning it.

20-23. Arrangement of the Audience: A President of the audience as described before should sit joyfully [in the hall] with his 18 The reading of the original of the MG seems to be different here, (see p. 15). The description of the mantrins is not found in any of the principal works on samgita. This again may be said to show that the AD follows a tradition which is different from that of the rest (vide notes on 15). The functions of the mantrins seem to be assisting the President. The need of an expert for the appreciation of different dialects (i.e. Prakrits) probably points to a time when the difference among them were not easily marked.

19 The MG adds to the character of the audience the following: "where men of truth are found, shining with good qualities, famous for righteous conduct, honoured by kings, adorned by the Vedas; where the Vedānta is expounded; when distinguished by the sound of voice and lute (viṇā); possessing heroes of reknown, ornamented by resplendent princes, shining with royal splendour" (p. 15). This gives also the seven limbs of the audience as men of learning, poets, elders, singers, buffons and those who are familiar with history and mythology (p. 15).

20 The śrutikāra, according to Prof. Kshiti Mohan Sen, is represented in modern times by the instrument called Tān-purā.

face towards the east. On his two sides should sit poets, advisers and friends. Dance should be performed in front of him. And the place [of dance] is called raṅga (the stage). When the dancing girl will be in the raṅga, a very good dancer (nāṭa) should remain near her. On her right side should stay two men with cymbals, and two [persons with] mṛdaṅgas (drum) should be on her two sides. A singer should remain between the latter two, and the drone (śrutikāra) should be near at hand. In this order should a group of players sit at the beginning of a nāṭya.

23-25. Characteristics of a Dancing Girl (pātra). She should be slender-bodied, beautiful, young, with full round breasts, self-confident, witty, pleasing, knowing well when to begin [a dance] and when to stop, having large eyes, able to perform in accompaniment of vocal and instrumental music, and to observe the proper time-beats (tāla), having splendid dresses and possessing a happy countenance. A girl having all these qualifications is called a dancer (pātra).

26-27. Her Disqualifications. The ten kinds of women that should be avoided in the nāṭya are: women with white specks in their eyeballs, or women who have scanty hair, or have thick lips or pendant breasts, or who are either very fat or very thin, or are either very tall or very short, or hunch-backed, or have no voice.

23-25 The word pātra for a dancing girl is to be noted: it is found in Medieval India (in Hindi) as pātura and pāturīyā, in the same sense. A dancing girl must be beautiful; for according to SR the true dance relates to a beautiful body, and dances other than this, are caricatures (VII, 1249). Next to her personal beauty, a good make-up is necessary for a dancing girl. The NŚ. speaks of the qualifications of the pātra (XXVII. 97-98). A description of the pātra occurs also in the SR (VII, 1241-1244).

26-27 The MG evidently reads veśyā nāṭye vivarjitāḥ (p. 16). This is obviously a misreading. The SR does not give any specific pātra-doṣa, but says that absence of guṇas (qualities) is to be counted as doṣa of a pātra. (see VII. 1247).

27-28. Essentials of a Dancing Girl. Agility, steadiness, rekḥā, practice in bhramarī movement, the glancing eye, endurance, memory, devotion [to her art], [clear] speech, good singing power, these ten are the essential qualities of a dancing girl. Dance should be performed by a dancing girl possessing these qualifications.

28-30. Qualities of Bells. Tiny bells (kiṅkiṇī) made of bronze (kāṁsya) should have pleasant sound, and should be well-shaped, and have stars as their [tutelary] deities, and should remain one aṅgūlī apart from one another. The dancing girl should bind a hundred of them or two hundred in each of her two feet with blue thread in tight knots.

31. Introductory Benediction etc. Praising Gaṇapati the god of muraḥa (= drum) and the Sky, one should pray to the Earth. Then 27-28 Rekhā in this passage has a technical meaning. A definition of the same occurs in the SR. VII. 1226. This word may be translated as 'harmony of lines in adjusting limbs in dance' or as 'graceful lines of the figure,' For bhramarī see 289ff.

The above enumeration of the merit of the pātra by the AD has been described by the MG, as pātrasya antaḥ prāṇāḥ (inner lives) which has been supplemented by a quotation from some unknown source which describes pātrasya bahiḥ prāṇāḥ (outer lives). The outer lives of the pātra are as follows: "the drums, cymbals of a good tone, the flute, the chorus, the drone, the lute (viṇā), the bells, and a male singer (gāyana) of reknown."

The definition of a dancer or actor (nāṭa) given in the MG is as follows: "Wise men say that the dancer (or actor) should be handsome, of sweet speech, learned, capable, eloquent, of good birth, learned in scriptures (śāstras) of art and science, of good voice, versed in song, instrumental music, and dancing, self-confident, and of ready wit". Such an enumeration shows the scholastic tendency in the later theorist, for the passage is surely from a late work treating of abhinaya. This does not occur in the AD.

31 The MG omits this section as well as the three following śloka on stuti and puṣpāñjali, but curiously enough describes in a passage quoted from elsewhere the Vulgar dance as a dance begun without prayer etc., and opines that those who witness the Vulgar dance will have no children and will be reborn in animals' wombs (p. 17).

The paraṣmai-pada of the root rabb in this śloka and in śloka 34, is a by means of various musical performances one should offer worship [to these gods]. Again after many kinds of charming tunes have been performed, the dancing girl should have the permission of her preceptor for beginning to dress herself suitably.

32. Praise of the Goddess of Raṅga. O Goddess of raṅga, victory to thee. Thou art the patron of the actor-class, the embodiment of the joy accruing from States (bhāvas) and Sentiments (rasas), yours is the kalā (art) that only can charm the whole world, victory to thee.

33-34. Offering of Flowers. Then to destroy evils, to protect living creatures, to please gods, to bring edification to spectators, welfare to the leader [of the naṭa-group], to protect the dancing girl [herself] and to make the teaching of her preceptor fruitful, the dancing girl should begin to offer flowers [to gods].

35-36. After finishing the pūrva-raṅga in this way, she should perform the nṛtya. Her nṛtya and songs accompanied by abhinaya violation of grammatical rule. This may not be explained as a sign of the antiquity of the work, for writers of technical treatises naturally cared more for the subject than the grammar and the style. And this violation of grammar may also be due to the influence of Prakrit which the author of the work in all likelihood spoke. The MG omits this passage (Prārthanādikam).

32 The MG omits this. It is curious that a goddess is invoked as the presiding deity of the stage.

The NŚ simply mentions that gods should be bowed to (IV. 273) and enumerates them earlier (III. 23ff.) This also may be interpreted as shewing that the AD follows a tradition of its own.

33-34 The MG omits this. Offering of flowers (puṣpāñjali) has been mentioned in the NŚ too (IV. 272). All these formalities compulsory at the beginning of a dance or drama show probably their original religious character. For the root rabh see notes on 31 above.

35 Dhanika in his ṛtti on Dhanañjaya's Daśarūpa (ed. Hall. p. 111.) defines Pūrvaraṅga.

According to Rāghavabhaṭṭa 12 only among its 22 limbs are to be called Pūrvaraṅga proper. These 12 limbs are Utthāpanā, four kinds of Parivartana, and the 7 parts of the Nāṇḍī such as Apakṛṣṭā Dhruvā, Suṣkāvaṛṣṭā Dhruvā, Raṅgadvāra, Cārī, Mahācārī, Trigata and Prarocanā (vide. NŚ. V. 22ff.)

Bhāva (the expression of States by means of gesture) as well as tāla should show States and conform to proper beats of time. She should sing with her mouth, express the meaning [of the song] by [gestures of] her hands, show States by her eyes, and beat time with her feet. Where the hand goes, eyes also should go there. Where the eyes go mind also should go there. Where the mind goes there the State (bhāva) should follow, and where there is the State, there the Sentiment (rasa) arises.

Four kinds of Abhinaya

38. It is said that abhinaya is preponderant there i.e., in the nṛtya described before. There are four kinds of abhinaya: āṅgika (of limbs.) vācika (of speech), ābhārya (of dress etc.) and sāttvika.

39. Āṅgika abhinaya is shown by means of limbs.

Vācika abhinaya has a place with regard to *kāvya*s (poems) and *nāṭaka*s (dramas) which are made up of speech.

40. Āṅgika abhinaya is the decoration of the body by means of necklaces and armlets etc.

40-41. Sāttvika abhinaya is performed with sāttvika emotions by those who know how to represent them. Motionlessness, perspiration, horripilation, change of voice, trembling, change of colour, tears and fainting are the eight sāttvika conditions.

42. Āṅgika is named as such because it is expressed in three ways by aṅga, pratyāṅga and upāṅga.

42-43. Aṅga: The six, such as, head, hands, chest, sides (beat of time) was essential for the proper performance of dance, drama, and songs in a drama.

36-37 These two ślokaś sum up one cardinal principle of the Indian dance and abhinaya.

39 In the MG (p. 17) we have an etymology of the word abhinaya (cf. NŚ. VIII. 5ff.) and after this it is stated that the AD is concerned with the āṅgika abhinaya only.

40-41 MG omits this portion and the first half of 42.

42-43 MG has 'armpits' (kakṣa) for 'chest' (vakṣa). Perhaps on an analogy (flanks), waist (hips) and feet are called aṅgas. Others include neck also among these.

43-45. Pratyāṅga. The six, such as, shoulder-blades, arms, back, belly, thigh (calves) and shanks are called pratyāṅgas. Others add three more, such as, wrists, elbows and knees to this, and the neck also.

45-49. Upāṅga. Scholars called shoulder an upāṅga, and eyes, eyebrows, eyeballs, cheeks, nose, jaw, lips, teeth, tongue, chin and face are also called upāṅgas. Thus upāṅgas in the head are twelve in number. In other limbs there are besides these others, such as heels, ankles, toes and fingers. I speak of these things according to śāstras (=rules of the art) which were extant before me. They i.e., aṅgas, pratyāṅgas and upāṅgas are to be used in every dance. Their description will be given in due order. But when an aṅga (major limb) moves, the pratyāṅga and upāṅga also move; hence all of them are not described here in this work.

Head-gestures

49-50. Sama, Udvāhita, Adhomukha, Ālolita, Dhuta, Kampita, Parāvṛtta, Utkṣipta and Parivāhita are the nine head-gestures named by those well-versed in the rules of nāṭya.

of the enumeration of six limbs in connexion with drama and dance, the six accessories the Vedic studies have been called śadaṅga. For obvious reasons limbs named in the two groups are not identical.

The NŚ agrees with the AD in its enumeration of the śadaṅga (cf. NŚ, VIII, 13).

43-45 Apare means 'other authorities' which may be persons as well as books; most probably both are meant here. The NŚ does not enumerate the pratyāṅgas though it mentions the word once in this connexion (Vide VIII, 12).

45 Upāṅgas mentioned in the NŚ, VIII, 13, are only six.

48-49 This plea for not defining all the different pratyāṅgas and upāṅgas is good, and is in sharp contrast with the elaborate of upāṅgas in the NŚ. (Vide VIII. 37-171).

49-50 After treating of these head gestures the MG quotes a different

51. Sama (level): The head when it is motionless but is not bent or raised up is named Sama.

51-52. Uses: Sama head is used at the beginning of nṛtya, in sitting for prayers etc., in pride and feigned anger of love, stupefaction and cessation from action.

52. Udvāhita (raised-up): When the face is raised up, the head is named Udvāhita.

53. Uses: In denoting a flag, the moon, the sky, a mountain, [bodies] moving in the sky or skywards, and very high objects, the wise people use the Udvāhita head.

54. Adhomukha (down-cast face): When the face is cast down, the head is called Adhomukha.

54-55. Uses: In denoting bashfulness, grief, bowing, anxiety, fainting, things placed below, and a plunge in water, this head is used.

55-56. Ālolita (rolling): When the head is moved round it is called Ālolita.

56. Uses: In denoting sleepiness, possession by an evil spirit, intoxication, fainting, travelling, a wild and uncontrolled laughter, this head is used.

treatment of them according to which they are twentyfour in number (p. 19).

Though the MG fathers the above upon Bharatācārya, the NŚ treats the head-gesture differently (cf. VIII. 15-35).

51-52 The MG gives the uses of the Sama head as 'Prayer, authoritative speech, satisfaction, anger, indifference, or inaction' (p. 18).

52 The MG has 'raising the head and keeping it still'. (p. 18),

53 The MG has 'dizziness, hesitation, laughter, etc.,' after 'fainting.'

54-55 The MG has 'regarding anything vile' after 'bowing' (p. 18).

56 The MG has 'dizziness, hesitation, laughter, etc.,' after 'faintness.'

57. Dhuta (shaken sideways): When the head is moved from the left side to the right one and vice-versa, the head is called Dhuta.

57-59. Uses: In denoting 'It does-not-exist,' looking repeatedly to sides, discouraging others, astonishment, sadness, unwillingness, effect of cold and fever, fear, the first stage of drinking liquor, battle effort, forbidding, revenge, glancing at one's own limbs and calling one from sides, this head is used by Bharata and others.

60. Kampita (nodded): When the head is shaken up and down, it is called Kampita.

60-61. Uses: To denote the offence taken, saying 'Do stop', enquiry, hinting, calling from near, inviting the deities, and threatening, this head is used.

61. Parāvṛtta (turned-round): When the face is turned round, the head is called Parāvṛtta.

62. Uses: In denoting the command 'That should be done', anger, shame, turning away the face, slighting, hair [or the head], and a quiver, this head is used.

63. Utkṣipta (thrown-up): When the head is turned aside and then raised up, it is called Utkṣipta.

64. Uses: To denote the command or request 'Take this' or 'Come', the supporting of [something] and acceptance, this head is used.

65. Parivāhita (widely moved): When the head is moved from from side to side like a chauri, the head is called Parivāhita.

65. Uses: In denoting infatuation, yearning for the separated

57-59 The MG gives the uses as looking 'repeatedly at thing, condolence with others, astonishment, dismay, indifference'...preparing for battle, rejection, impatience,...summoning from both sides,...SR assigns some of the uses to the Vidhuta and some to the Ādhuta head. (cf. VII. 65, 57).

62 The MG gives the uses as follows: 'Saying "Do this", aversion, modesty, quiver, relaxing the features, slighting, hair, etc.' Rāghavabhaṭṭa quotes the AD on the Parāvṛtta head. (Nirṇayasagara ed. p. 40).

lover, uttering the praise of deity, satisfaction, approval and cogitation, this head is used.

Glances

66-67. According to ancient masters, glances are eight in number such as, Sama, Ālokita, Sācī, Pralokita, Nimīlita, Ullokita, Anuvṛtta and Avalokita.

67. Sama (level): The [straight] glance [without moving the eye-lashes], like that of a female divinity, is called Sama.

68. Uses: It is used to denote the beginning of a nāṭya, scale, an effort to guess what another persons is thinking, surprise, and the image of a god.

69. Ālokita (keen glance): Gazing quickly with open eyes is called Ālokita.

69-70. Uses: It is used to denote the turning of a potter's wheel, showing all sorts of objects, and begging.

70. Sācī (sidelong): Looking out of the corner of the eyes is called Sācī according to those versed in the rules of the Nāṭya.

71-72. Uses: It is used to denote hinting, touching moustache, making a mark with an arrow, a parrot, remembering, and beginning of deeds.

72. Pralokita (wide-glance): Looking from side to side, is called Pralokita.

66-67 The NS also describes eight glances, but differently (VIII. 101-105). Evidently a different tradition has been followed there. In addition to the eight glances the MG gives from another source fortyfour kind of glances (pp. 21-22).

68 The expression 'thinking of some other persons' seems to be the translation of a wrong reading for anyacintā-viniścaye in the original of the MG.

69 The MG has this as 'swiftly turning with keen glances' (p. 21).

72 The MG has here 'aiming arrow, hinting and Kulaṭa nāṭya.'

73. Uses: It is used to denote things situated on both sides, excessive affection, moving, and idiocy.

74-75. Nimīlita (closed): Half-closed eyes make the Nimīlita glance.

74-75. Uses: It is used to denote a snake, being under another man's power, muttering [prayers etc.,] meditation, salutation, lunacy, and keen observation.

75. Ullokita (looking up): Looking upwards is called Ullokita.

76. Uses: It is used to denote the top of a flag, a tower, the heavenly orbs, previous birth, height and moon-light.

77. Anuvṛtta: Glancing quickly up and down is called Anuvṛtta.

77. Uses: It is used to denote angry looks, and greeting of friends.

78. Avalokita (looking down): Looking downwards is called Avalokita.

78-79. Uses: It is used to denote looking at a shadow, reflection, exercise, fatigue, study, looking at one's own limbs.

Neck Movements

79-80. Neck Movements: According to those who know of States (bhāva) there are four necks: Sundarī, Tiraścīnā, Parivartitā, Prakampitā.

80. Sundarī: When the neck is moved to and fro horizontally it is called Sundarī.

81. Uses: It is used to denote the beginning of affection, effort, in the sense of 'completely,' width, and approval with pleasure.

82. Tiraścīnā: The neck making an upward movement on both sides like the gliding of a snake, is called Tiraścīnā.

73 The MG has 'making signs, moving and discordant mind.'

74-75 The MG has 'the appearance of a sage (ṛṣi)'.

Besides these the MG gives six movements of brows as mentioned elsewhere.

81 The MG has "well-done" recollection, badinage, sympathetic pleasure.'

83. Uses: It is used to denote exercise with a sword, and the gliding of a snake.

83-84. Parivartitā: The neck moving from right to left like a half-moon, is called Parivartitā.

84-85. Uses: By those who know the nāṭya-tantra, it is used to denote female dance (lāsya), and kissing two cheeks of the beloved.

85-86. Prakampitā. The neck when it is moved backward and forward like the movement of a she-pigeon's neck, is called Prakampitā.

86-87. Uses: It is used to denote saying 'you and I', folk-dances, swinging and the inarticulate murmurings, and the sound uttered by a woman at the time of conjugal embrace (maṇita).

Classification of Hands

SINGLE HANDS

87-88. Now the characteristics of hands will be described by me. They are of two kinds: single and combined.

88-92. Single Hands: In the beginning the characteristics of single hands will be told. They are twenty-eight in number: Patāka, Tripatāka, Ardhapatāka, Kartarīmukha, Mayūra, Ardhaçandra, Arāla, Śukatunḍa, Muṣṭi, Śikhara, Kapittha, Kaṭakāmukha; Sūcī, Candrakalā, Padmakōśa, Sarpasīras, Mṛgaśīrṣa, Siṃhamukha, Kāṅgula, Alapadma, Catura, Bhramara, Haṃsāsya, Haṃsapakṣa, Sandaṇṣa, Mukula, Tāmracūḍa and Triśūla.

88-92. Patāka (flag). The hand in which the thumb is bent to touch the fingers, and the fingers are extended, is called Patāka.

94-100. Uses: It is used in the beginning of a nāṭya and to denote the clouds, a forest, forbidding things, bosom, might, a river, region of gods, the horse, cutting, wind, lying down, attempt 86-87 The MG has 'counting' (= gaṇite?) for maṇite.

87-88 The MG puts in after this, twelve lives of hands (bastapṛāṇāḥ).

at going, prowess, favour, moonlight, strong sunlight, forcing open doors, meaning of seven case-endings, wave, entering a street, equality, anointing the body of one's ownself, taking an oath, silence, palmyra leaf, shield, touching things, benediction, the ideal king, saying 'such and such a place', the sea, succession of good deeds, addressing a person, going forward, holding a sword, a month, a year, a rainy day, and cleaning with broom.

100. Tripatāka (a flag with three). When the ring-finger is bent in a Patāka hand, it is called Tripatāka.

101-102. Uses: It is used to denote a crown, a tree, the vajra (thunder bolt of Indra), and the bearer of vajra (Indra), the ketakī flower, a lamp, raising flames, a pigeon, patterns drawn on the face or breast (patralekbā), an arrow, and turning round.

103. Ardhapatāka (half-flag): If the little finger of the Tripatāka hand is bent down, it is called Ardhapatāka.

103-104. Uses: It is used to denote leaves, a board or slab for writing or painting, the bank of a river, saying 'both', a knife, a banner, a tower, and a horn.

105. Kartarīmukha: If the fore-finger and the little finger of the same hand (Ardhapatāka) are outspread it is called Kartarīmukha.

106-107. Uses: It is used to denote the separation of a man and a woman, overturning or opposition, plundering, a corner of an eye, death, estrangement, lightning, sleeping alone during separation, falling and weeping.

108. Mayūra (peacock): When the ring-finger of the Kartarī-

100 It is noteworthy that janāntike (=aside) does not occur in the vinīyoga of the Tripatāka hand, though the Daśarūpa refers to it (vide Ed. Hall, 1. 95).

101-102 The MG has 'cheek' (= kapola) for 'pigeon' (= kapota).

The MG gives additional definitions of hands from another work. The author of this work invents the sage (ṛṣi), race (vaṁśa), colour (varṇa) and the guardian deity (devatā) etc., of the hands (pp. 27ff). We cannot ascertain what led him to give a Vedic colouring to these evidently extra-Vedic things.

mukha hand is joined to the thumb, and other fingers are extended, it is called the Mayūra hand.

109-110. Uses: It is used to denote the peacock's neck, a creeper, a bird, vomiting, removing hair, an ornamental mark on the forehead (tilaka), scattering (agitating) river-water, discussing the Śāstras, and a famous thing.

111. Ardhacandra (half-moon): If the thumb of the Patāka hand is stretched out, the latter is called Ardhacandra.

112-113. Uses: It is used to denote the phase of the moon on the eighth day of the dark fortnight, a hand seizing the throat, a spear, consecrating an image, a dining plate, origin, waist, musing, one's ownself, meditation, prayers, touching limbs, and greeting by common people.

114. Arāla (bent): When the fore-finger of the Patāka hand is curved, the latter is called Arāla.

114. Uses: It is used to denote drinking poison, nectar etc., and violent wind.

115. Śukatunḍa (parrot's head): Arāla, when its third finger is bent, is called Śukatunḍa.

115-116. Uses: It is used to denote the shooting of an arrow, a spear, remembering one's abode, saying of mystic things, and violent mood.

116-117. Muṣṭi (fist): When the four fingers are bent into the palm and the thumb is set on them, that hand is called Muṣṭi.

117-118. Uses: It is used to denote steadfastness, grasping the hair, holding things, and the fighting mood of wrestlers.

118. Sikhara (peak): If the Muṣṭi hand has its thumb, raised up it becomes Sikhara.

119-121. Uses: It is used to denote amour (or god of love), a bow, a pillar, certainty, making offering to manes, the upper lip, something entered, a tooth, questioning, the phallic symbol, saying 'no', 166 This hand and the three following ones (167, 168, 169) have not been enumerated in the list of single hands (59-62). The MG omits this hand, and mentions two more single hands such as Urṇanābha and Bāṇa.

168-170 The lacunae in the text have been suggested by the editor. The mss. do not show them.

170. Palli. If in the Mayūra hand the middle finger is put on the back of the fore-finger, the Palli hand will be the result.

171. Uses: It is used to denote a village or a hut.

171-172. These (single hands) will [also] form combined hands according to exigencies of abhinaya. Their ways (characteristics) with reference to their objects will be shown in due order.

COMBINED HANDS

172-175. According to older teachers including Bharata and others, the combined hands are twenty-three in number. They are : Añjali, Kapota, Karkaṭa, Svastika, Ḍolā, Puṣpapuṭa, Utsaṅga, Śivaliṅga, Kaṭakāvardhana, Kartarīsvastika, Śakaṭa, Śaṅkha, Cakra, Sampuṭa, Pāśa, Kilaka, Matsya, Kūrma, Varāha Garuḍa, Nāgabandha, Khaṭvā and Bheruṇḍa.

176. Añjali. If two Patāka hands join the palms it is called Añjali.

176-177. Uses: It is to be held on the head, face and bosom respectively in the salutation of a deity, a preceptor and a Vipra (Brāhmaṇa).

172-175 In this connexion the MG gives the following: 'When two single hands are combined that is a combined hand. Even though the origin and meaning remain the same the patron deity always differs'. But the origin and the patron deity have been mentioned only in the case of following hands: Añjali, Kapota, Karkaṭa, Ḍolā, Puṣpapuṭa, Utsaṅga and Kaṭakāvardhana. Instead of twenty-three, the MG gives twenty-four Saṃyuta hands. The one additional hand here is called Avahittha which is two Alapadma hands held on breasts. 'Erotic dance (śṛṅgāra-naṭana) holding a playball, and the breasts are its vinīyoga (uses)'.

The MG gives twenty-seven combined hands from another book.

None of these names except Svastika is to be found in the list given in the present text. The MG which is never tired of quoting gives a third list of (twenty-seven) Saṃyuta hands (p. 43). Names and descriptions of these hands in many cases correspond to those mentioned above.

177. Kapota. Añjali becomes Kapota when the two [Patāka] hands meet only at their base, side and end.

178. Uses: It is to be used in salutation, addressing a preceptor, respectful acceptance or agreement.

178-179. Karkāṭa. When the fingers of one hand are run through the opening between fingers of the other, and the fingers remain either inside (towards the palm) or outside (on the back of the hand) the hand is called Karkāṭa.

179-180. Uses: It is used to denote the coming of a multitude, showing the belly, filling the conch-shell with wind, twisting or stretching of limbs and pulling a branch down.

180-181. Svastika. When two Patāka hands are put across each other at their wrist, they form the Svastika hand.

181. Use: It is used to denote a crocodile (makara).

181. Dolā. When the Patāka hands are placed on the thigh the Dolā hand is formed.

182. Use: It is used at the beginning of nāṭya.

182. Puṣpapuṭa. When two Sarpasīrṣa hands meet on one side they form the Puṣpapuṭa hand.

183. Uses: It is used in waving lights before an image of a god, as an act of adoration, taking of water, fruit etc. giving offerings to gods, evening, and a flower invested with magical power.

184. Utsaṅga. If hands showing Mrgasīrṣa are placed on the upper arm of opposite hands the Utsaṅga hand is made.

185. Uses: It is used to denote embrace, displaying armlets and such other ornaments, and coaching of boys.

186. Śivaliṅga. When Ardhaçandra is held by the left hand and Śikhara by the right, the Śivaliṅga hand is made.

186. Use: It is used in showing the phallic symbol.

187. Kaṭakāvardhana. When a Svastika is made by placing two Katakāmukha hands at their wrist, it is called Kaṭakāvardhana.

188. Uses: It is used in coronation, worshipping, and marriage etc.

188. Kartarīsvastika. When a Svastika is made by two Kartarī hands [placed at their wrist] it is called Kartarīsvastika.

189. Uses: It is used to denote branches, hill tops, and trees.

189. Sakaṭa. When the middle finger of the Bhramara hands is stretched it becomes Sakaṭa hand.

190. Use: This hand is often used in playing in the role of a Rākṣasa (demon).

190-191. Śaṅkha. When thumb of a Śikhara hand meets the other thumb and is clung round by the fore-finger [close to the latter thumb] the hand is called Śaṅkha.

191. Uses: It is used to denote conch-shell and such other things.

192. Cakra. When the palms in Ardhaçandra hands are put across each other they make Cakra hand.

192. Uses: It is to denote a cakra (wheel).

193. Sampuṭa. When the fingers in Cakra hands are curved, it is called the Sampuṭa hand.

193. Uses: It is used for covering things and in representing a box.

194. Pāśa. When the fore-fingers of Sūcī hands are close to each other [bent inwards], the hand is called Pāśa.

194. Uses: It is used to denote a mutual quarrel, a string and a chain.

195. Kīlaka. When the little fingers of the Mṛgaśīrṣa hands are bent inwards and close to each other, the hand is called Kīlaka.

195. Uses: It is used to denote affection and a jocose talk.

187 The SR mentions this as the Khaṭakāvardhamāna.

196. Matsya. When one hand is placed on the back of another and the two thumbs are out-stretched, the hand is called Matsya.

197. Use: It is used to denote a fish.

197. Kūrma. When the tips of thumbs and little fingers of the Cakra hands are bent, it is called the Kūrma hand.

198. Use: It is used to denote a tortoise.

198. Varāha. When one Mṛgaśīrṣa is placed above another and the thumb of the one hand meets that of the other and vice versa, the hand is called Varāha.

199. Use: It is used to denote a boar.

200. Garuḍa. When palms of two Ardhacandra hands are placed horizontally with the two thumbs placed on each other, the hand is called Garuḍa.

200. Use: It is used to denote Garuḍa.

201. Nāgabandha. The Sarpaśīrṣa and the Svastika hands placed together will make the Nāgabandha hand.

201. Use: It is used to denote the Nāgabandha.

202. Khaṭvā. Placing one Catura hand on another Catura hand with the fore-finger and thumb of each released, will make the Khaṭvā hand.

202. Uses: It is used to denote a bedstead and a litter.

203. Bheruṇḍa. When the two Kapittha hands are joined at their wrists, the Bheruṇḍa hand will result.

203. Uses: It is used to denote the Bheruṇḍa, and a pair of birds.

Hands for Deities

204. Now the hands which are prescribed for the dramatic representation and the sculptural construction of deities are being described in the following order:

203. A fabulous being named Bheruṇḍa is sometimes met with in the Bengali folk-lore.

253. Mercury: If Muṣṭi is horizontally held by the left hand and Patāka by the right one, then Mercury's hands are produced.

254. Jupiter: Showing Śikhara to indicate the sacred thread will make the hands of a Ṛṣi or Brahmin as well as that of Jupiter.

255. Venus: To hold Muṣṭi with both hands and to keep the left hand high up and the right one down, will make Venus's hands.

256. Saturn: To show Śikhara with the left hand and Triśūla with the right one, is to make Saturn's hands.

257. Rāhu: To show Sarpaśīrṣa with the left hand and Sūcī with the right, is to make the hands of Rāhu.

258. Ketu: To show Sūcī with the left hand and Patāka with the right, is to make the hands of Ketu.

Feet in Dance

259-260. Feet in different positions and with different movements will be described in accordance with the old tradition. These [positions and movements] give rise to Maṇḍala (posture), Utplavana (leaping movement or jumping), Bhramarī (flight movement) and Padacārī or Cārī (gait). Their definitions are to follow.

Standing Postures (Maṇḍala)

260-261. There are ten standing postures: Sthānka (simple standing), Āyata, Ālīḍha, Pratyālīḍha, Preṅkhaṇa, Prerita, Svastika, Moṭita, Samasūcī, and Pārśvasūcī.

262. Sthānaka: Standing with Samapāda feet in the same line and touching the hip with Ardhaçandra hands, will be Sthānaka.

263. Āyata: Standing with two feet half a cubit apart from each other in a Caturasra posture and at the same time bending knees a little apart and placing one of them upon the other, will give rise to the Āyata posture.

264-265. Ālīḍha: Place the left foot before the right one at a distance of one cubit and a half, make Śikhara with the left hand and Kaṭakāmukha with the right one ; this, according to Bharata and others, will give rise to the Ālīḍha posture.

266. Pratyālīḍha: If hands and feet are interchanged in the Ālīḍha posture, it will be called Pratyālīḍha.

266-267. Preṅkhaṇa: Putting one foot by the side of another heel and having Kūrma hands, will give rise to the Preṅkhaṇa posture.

267-269. Prerita: Putting one foot violently [on the earth] at a distance of one cubit and a half from another and standing with knees bent and one of them put across another and holding the Śikhara hand in the breast and showing the Patāka hand stretched out, will give rise to the Prerita posture.

269-271. Svastika: The right foot should be put across the left foot, and the right hand should be put across the left hand ; thus will be the Svastika posture.

271-272. Moṭita: Rest on the earth with the forepart (toes) of the feet and touch the earth with each knee alternately and make Tripatāka with both the hands ; this will give rise to the Moṭita posture.

272. Samasūci: A posture in which the earth is touched with toes and knees is called Samasūci.

273. Pārśvasūci: A posture in which the earth is touched with toes and by one knee on one side, is called Pārśvasūci.

Varieties of Resting Postures (Sthānaka)

274-275. Resting postures are of six kinds according to the placing of feet. They are Samapāda, Ekapāda, Nāgabandha, Aindra, Garuḍa and Brāhma.

275. Samapāda: Standing with two feet alike is called Samapāda.

276. Uses: It is used in offering flowers [to gods] and playing in the role of gods.

276. Ekapāda: Standing with one foot and laying the other across the knee of that foot will give the Ekapāda position.

277. Uses: It is used to denote motionlessness and the practice of penance (tapasyā).

277-278. Nāgabandha: Standing like a serpent intertwining two feet and two hands together will give the Nāgabandha posture.

278. Use: It is used in showing the Nāgabandha.

278-279. Aindra: Standing with one leg bent and the other leg and knee raised and hands hanging naturally, will give rise to Aindra posture. Uses: It is used in suggesting Indra and a king.

280-281. Gāruḍa: If in the Ālīḍha posture one knee is put on the ground and the two hands jointly show the gesture (?) it will be the Gāruḍa posture. Use: It is used to denote Garuḍa.

281-282. Brāhma: Sitting with one foot on one knee and another foot on another knee will give rise to Brāhma posture.

282. Uses: It is used to denote japa (repeated muttering of prayers) and similar matters.

Different Kinds of Leaps (Utplavana)

282-283. Now, the definition of various leaps will be given. They are of five kinds: Alaga, Kartarī, Aśva, Moṭita and Kṛpālaga.

284. Alaga: Leaping with both the feet and placing Sikhara hand on the hip, at the same time, will be Alaga.

285-286. Kartarī: Leaping on toes with Kartarī hands held behind the left foot, and holding on one's waist a downward Sikhara hand at the same time, will be Kartarī jump.

286-287. Aśva: First, leap on two feet and then place them together, and make Tripatāka with both the hands. This will be Aśva jump.

287-288. Moṭita: Leaping on both sides alternately like a Kartarī, will be Moṭita jump.

288-289. Kṛpālaga: By heels of both the feet alternately touch the hip and keep Ardhaśāstra hands between the two. This will make Kṛpālaga.

Various Flights (Bhramarī)

289-291. Here, we shall describe various flights [in a dance]. According to persons versed in the Nāṭyaśāstra they are seven: Utpluta, Cakra, Garuḍa, Ekapāda, Kuñcita, Ākāśa and Aṅga.

292. Utpluta: If a person moves round his entire body from a Samapāda posture, he is said to perform the Utpluta bhramarī.

293. Cakra: If keeping feet on the earth and carrying Tripatāka hands, one moves round rapidly one then performs Cakra bhramarī.

294. Garuḍa: Stretch one foot across another and put the knee on the earth and then move about rapidly with outstretched arms. This will be the Garuḍa bhramarī.

295. Ekapāda: Moving round alternately on one foot will be the Ekapāda bhramarī.

296. Kuñcita: Moving round with knees bent will be the Kuñcita bhramarī.

296-297. Ākāśa: If one moves round his entire body after making his fully stretched feet wide apart in a jump, he will make the Ākāśa bhramarī.

297-298. Aṅga: If one leaps with feet half a cubit apart and then stops, he performs the Aṅga bhramarī.

Different Gaits

298-300. Now the definition of various Cārīs will be told by me. According to persons who know Bharata's works well they are eight:

Calana, Caṅkramaṇa, Saraṇa, Veginī, Kuṭṭana, Luṭhita, Lolita, and Viṣama.

301. Calana (walking): Advancing a foot from its natural place will be Calana (walking).

301-302. Caṅkramaṇa (making a leap): Persons well-versed in nāṭya say that a gait made by two feet carefully raised up and thrown sideways alternately, is called Caṅkramaṇa (making a leap).

302-303. Saraṇa (moving): Moving like a leech that is covering ground, by joining one heel with another [at each step] and holding at the same time Patāka hands, is called Saraṇa (moving).

304-305. Veginī (running): If a nāṭa walks swiftly on his heels or toes or by his entire sole, and holds Alapadma and Tripatāka hands alternately, he is said to go with Veginī (running) gait.

305-306. Kuṭṭana (pounding): The striking of the earth with the heel or the fore-part of a foot or the entire sole, is called Kuṭṭana.

306. Luṭhita (rolling): Performing Kuṭṭana from the Svastika posture, is called Luṭhita (rolling).

307. Lolita (trembling): Slowly moving a foot which has not touched the earth after performing Kuṭṭana as described before, is called Lolita (trembling).

308. Viṣama (rough): Setting the left foot to the right of the right one, and the right foot to the left of the left one alternately at the time of walking, is called Viṣama (rough) gait.

Different Kinds of Stepping

309-310. The different kinds of stepping with their definitions will be told gradually. These are ten in number: Goose-step, Peacock-step, Deer-step, Elephant-step, Lion-step, Snake-step, Frog-step, Heroic-step and Human-step.

311-312. Goose-step: Placing slowly one foot after another at a distance of half a cubit and bending on two sides alternately and carrying Tripatāka with both hands, will be stepping like a goose.

312-313. Peacock-step: To stand on toes and to carry Kapittha in both the hands and to move both the knees alternately will be making Peacock-steps.

313-314. Deer-step: Running forward or sideways like a deer with Tripatāka on both the hands will be called Deer-step.

314-315. Elephant-step: To walk slowly with Samapāda feet with hands holding Patāka on both sides is to have Elephant-step.

315-316. Horse-step: To raise the right foot and jump in quick succession and to hold Śikhara with the left hand and Patāka with the right [hand] will be the Horse-step.

317. Lion-step: First stand on toes and then jump forward swiftly and proceed in this manner with Śikhara held in both the hands. This will be the Lion-step.

318. Snake-step: If one holds Tripatāka with both hands and on both sides and walks as before, he is said to move like a snake.

319. Frog-step: If one holds Śikhara with both hands and steps almost like a lion, he is said to go with Frog-steps.

320. Heroic step: Coming from a distance holding Śikhara with the left hand and Patāka with the right one, will be called the Heroic step.

321-322. Human step: When one goes round in quick succession and puts the left hand on the waist, holds Kaṭakāmukha with the right one, he is said to move with Human steps.

323-324. Maṇḍalas, Utplavanas, Bhramarīs, Cārīs, Gatis according to their relation to one another are endless in number and variety. Uses of these in dance and drama are to be learnt from the Śāstras, tradition, and through the favour of wise people.

OPINIONS ON THE FIRST EDITION

Orientalni Archiv (Prahá) : This is a first critical edition of a rare book on an interesting subject, important for the history both of Indian Drama and the Indian Arts : music, dance, histrionic art and throwing light on the arts of painting and sculpture...In his learned Introduction...Mr. Ghosh discusses the importance of Abhinaya (histrionic art) for the Indian drama and its history, in connection with dance and music, the most important art of ancient India.

A. K. Coomaraswamy (in a letter) : I welcome the improvements that have been made on the original production, which was, as you well know, a pioneer work ... (and in the Preface to the second ed. of Mirror of Gesture) Mr. Ghosh's work will be indispensable to every student who proposes to make a critical examination of the text...

Prof. M. Winternitz (in a letter) : It is an excellent book, and a very valuable contribution to our knowledge of Indian arts and literature.

Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland : this is the first full and critical edition, made from two complete mss. and fragments of three others, and will be welcomed by students of Indian Drama, painting and sculpture as well as dancing...Mr. Ghosh has added a useful Introduction containing summary of the ancient literature on the subject...variant readings; notes on the subject matter, and an index of technical terms.
